PHILADELPHIA (MARCH 2) PR NEWSWIRE - Philadelphia Electric Co. (NYSE: PE) said today that 90 percent of the electricity the company produced in the first two months of 1990 was generated by nuclear power.

Joseph F. Paquette Jr., PE chairman and chief executive officer, said the extraordinarily high nuclear output was due to the excellent performance of the company's six nuclear reactors, which operated at more than 80 percent of full capacity for the first two months of the year.

Paquette said the fuel cost to the company to produce the 5.2 billion kwh of electricity generated by nuclear power in January and February was approximately $140 million less than the fuel cost that would have been realized if PE had to produce the same amount of electricity with oil-fired generation from its own plants and from the regional power pool.

PE owns and operates two nuclear units at its Limerick Generating Station in Montgomery County, Pa.; it operates and jointly owns two units at its Peach Bottom Atomic Power Station in York County, Pa., and is part owner of two units at the Salem Generating Station in New Jersey, operated by Public Service Electric and Gas Co.

All six units combined operated at 83 percent of capacity for January and February. Limerick's two units led the way, with Unit 2 operating at full capacity and Unit 1 operating at 96.7 percent of capacity.

PE's generation projections for the year include 67 percent nuclear, 19 percent coal, 5 percent oil, 4 percent hydro-electric and 5 percent purchased power from the Pennsylvania-New Jersey-Maryland Interchange (PJM), the area's regional power pool. The national industry average for nuclear output is approximately 20 percent.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) PR NEWSWIRE - Exxon (NYSE: XON) today announced an immediate suspension of tanker and barge operations at its Bayway Refinery and Bayonne Terminal, pending a comprehensive evaluation of its marine and terminal operating practices, procedures and facilities at those locations.

Lee Raymond, president of Exxon Corporation, said, "The evaluation will be made by a team of operating, technical and environmental experts which is now being assembled and which will begin work as soon as possible. The team will be composed of experts from other Exxon units, including international affiliates as well as independent consultants."

The Bayway Refinery receives its raw material supplies through its marine facilities. Consequently, operations in the refinery will be sharply curtailed. However, alternate supply arrangements are being made. Exxon anticipates that gasoline, heating oil, propane and other products will continue to be made available to customers on an uninterrupted basis. Arrangements are also being developed for chemicals to minimize the impact of the suspension of marine operations on customers.

"Exxon places great emphasis on the integrity of its operations," Raymond said. "We deeply regret the recent accidents at our New Jersey facilities and the impacts and concerns they have caused. We are seriously committed to conducting our operations in a safe and environmentally responsible manner, and we are taking this measure to demonstrate that commitment."

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) PR NEWSWIRE - United States District Judge Pierre N. Leval today limited the access of Mary Kay Corporation employees to the internal shareholder records of Avon Products Inc. (NYSE: AVP).

Mary Kay is an investor in Chartwell Associates L.P., which has nominated a slate of directors for election at Avon's annual meeting May 3.

Avon offered to make the shareholder records available to a limited number of Mary Kay employees who want to solicit proxies if the employees would sign affidavits that the information would not be misused.

The judge ordered employees of Mary Kay, who are granted access to any of the information in the internal shareholder records provided by Avon, to hold the information in strictest confidence and not use the information for any purpose other tan the solicitation of proxies by Chartwell.

He further stated that under no circumstances can information contained in Avon's internal shareholder records be used for competitive purposes on behalf of Mary Kay. He said that the information could not be used to recruit sales personnel or engage in any direct promotional or marketing efforts for Mary Kay.

The ruling came after the judge modified his Feb. 26 ruling to allow 25 Mary Kay employees access to Avon's shareholder records, if they signed affidavits committing to abide by the judge's order.

"It is gratifying that the judge appreciates the sensitivity of passing confidential information to a direct competitor," an Avon spokesman said. "It is also interesting to note that Chartwell, which claims to have no connection whatsoever with Mary Kay, will be using Mary Kay employees to solicit proxies."

SAN DIEGO (MARCH 2) UPI - So much for hot dogs, peanuts and Cracker Jacks at the ball game. San Diego Padre fans will be noshing on vegetable sticks fruit cups and sushi this season, washing them down with bottled water.

Service America Corp., the food concessionaire at San Diego's Jack Murphy Stadium, unveiled its 1990 baseball season menu Thursday, hoping to keep health-conscious Californians well nourished between innings.

Baseball fans who are less picky about cholesterol and fat can look forward to Italian and Polish sausages, fish tacos, cinnamon buns and varietal wines, such as Chardonnay and rose, the firm's general manager Bud Cappello said.

Non-alcoholic malt beverages will be served as a healthful alternative to beer, and drinks will be served in biodegradable cups to replace Styrofoam and plastic containers that pile up in landfills, Cappello said.

Last season, Service America added sushi to the stadium menu. The presence of Japanese raw fish rolls at America's national pasttime prompted worldwide news coverage and provoked the ire of nationally syndicated columnist Mike Royko, who ridiculed the idea, Stadium business manager Stephen Shushan said surveys had indicated fans wanted healthier food at the ballpark and the popularity of the new fish rolls bore that out.

''The sushi was phenomenal. It sold out about every game,'' Shushan said.

San Diegans also had expressed a desire for a more diversified stadium menu featuring low-fat, low-calorie foods, Shushan said.

''Southern Californians are more health-conscious, so we try to do things a little differently,'' he said.

ASADABAD, AFGHANISTAN (MARCH 2) UPI - Guerrillas in Kunar province held the first partisan elections in Afghan history, choosing a 100-member Consultative Council to rule the rebel-held northeastern region.

The elections were conducted Thursday by U.S.-backed guerrilla groups in defiance of the government-in-exile established last year in Pakistan by the Afghan resistance, a rebel coalition opposed to the Soviet-backed Kabul government.

Loudspeakers blared throughout the Kunar provincial capital of Asadabad, in a valley surrounded by the snow-capped peaks of the Hindu Kush mountains, urging Afghanis to exercise their franchise.

Posters with the symbols of the political parties adorned the mud houses and ramshackle stores selling rice, flour, fruit clothing and military goods.

Hundreds of people, most of them guerrillas in traditional long shirts and baggy pants and carrying assault rifles, lined up outside the 21 polling stations throughout the province during voting hours from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Guerrillas in battle fatigues stood guard, and no trouble was reported during the voting.

For most young rebels, the vote was their initial experience with elections.

''This is the first time in my life that I'm voting, so it's a great experience,'' 25-year-old driver Mohammad Dir Gul said as he waited his turn.

Twelve parties were represented on the ballots, including seven belonging to the Afghan government-in-exile, whose local members took part in defiance of their leaders in Pakistan. Each party will seat members in Kunar's 100-member governing council, or Shoora, in proportion to its share of the vote.

Election officials printed 300,000 ballots and allowed males at least 15 years old to vote. Supporters of President Najibullah's communist People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan were barred from voting.

Voting was held in some of the Pakistani camps housing more than 3 million Afghani refugees, but some camp authorities, fearing violence, tried to prevent the voting, resistance officials said.

Since the rebels seized Kunar in October 1988, two rival governments have administered the province, one from the government-in-exile in Pakistan and the other from the Ahle-Hadith Party, whose members belong to Islam's Wahabbi sect, which preaches strict adherence to the teachings of the Koran.

"We have had two governments here,'' Kunar Gov. Qazi Ehsanullah said. "But we felt the best way was to hold elections and have one government. We are proving that elections can be held anywhere in Afghanistan, even on the front lines.''

Ehsanullah, who belongs to the Saudi-backed Ahle-Hadith, said religion was a primary consideration for most voters. ''The main issue in the election has been Islam,'' he said. ''The voters have to decide who is in a better position to deliver the goods on this score.''

The voting was the first partisan election in Afghanistan. King Zahir Shah convened the country's last elections in 1965 and 1969 on a nonpartisan basis. He was ousted in a 1973 coup and a Soviet-backed revolution in 1978 brought the communist government to power.

Moscow withdrew its troops in February 1989, ending a nine-year occupation, but the guerrillas have failed to topple Najibullah, who has grown confident.

The rebel Afghan Interim Government in Pakistan, known as AIG, promised at its inception last year to hold elections inside Afghanistan within six months to seat a broad-based Shoora council to replace Najibullah's administration.

No such polls have taken place, sparking growing rifts in the impatient rebel alliance. The AIG announced in January that the elections would be scheduled early this year, but the restive resistance could not wait.

''We have waited more than one year for the AIG to fulfill its mandate to shift inside Afghanistan and to hold elections,'' said Ghulam Rabbani, the chief election commissioner and a former governor of Kunar. ''But it hasn't happened so we decided to go ahead for ourselves.

''We are not revolting against the AIG but showing the way for the rest of Afghanistan,'' Rabbani said. ''The Kunar government will become part of greater Afghanistan.''

Most voters interviewed said they would vote for the Ahle-Hadith faction.

''They offer pure unadulterated Islam,'' said Mohammad Kareem, a resistance fighter in his 20s.

(MARCH 1) UPI - The Philadelphia 76ers are having fun. Winning will do that to a team.

Smiling and talking to anyone within earshot, the Philadelphia 76ers moved a step closer to the top of the Atlantic Division Thursday night with a 105-100 victory over the New York Knicks.

''This is a fun season. We had so much fun tonight that we were talking to the fans as well as our opponents,'' said Sixers guard Hersey Hawkins who poured in 24 points.

Maybe the Sixers thought it was funny, but the Knicks weren't laughing. The win moves the Sixers to within one-half game of the first-place Knicks. The two teams will meet for the final time next week in Wednesday.

''Me and Mahorn get too much of the credit and Hersey Hawkins doesn't get enough,'' said Barkley who scored a game-high 32 points and pulled down 15 rebounds. ''When he hits his shots he takes the pressure off me and makes life easier. He is the key to the team this year.''

Hawkins sure was the key against the Knicks.

Hawkins scored 18 of his 24 points in the second half, including eight during a four-minute stretch of the third quarter that keyed a 13-4 run that put the Sixers ahead to stay.

Hawkins, who came under criticism after a poor playoff performance last year when the Knicks swept the Sixers, looked like the same player that led the NCAA in scoring as a college senior.

He made some spectacular drives to the basket, drawing fouls and converting all eight of his free throw attempts.

''They told me to shoot more and I'm doing that,'' said Hawkins.

After the Sixers had taken an 82-73 lead early in the fourth quarter, the Knicks closed to 88-84 with 3:49 left.

Patrick Ewing, who led the Knicks with 30 points and 18 rebounds, brought the Knicks to within 88-86, but Barkley completed a 3-point play with 2:21 to go.

The Sixers then closed with an 11-6 run over the next two minutes, hitting 8 straight free throws.

Mike Gminski added 16 points, Rick Mahorn 15 and and Derek Smith had 11 for the Sixers. Charles Oakley scored 18 and pulled down 11 rebounds and Johnny Newman had 19 points for New York.

''I thought we played exceptionally hard,'' said New York Coach Stu Jackson. ''We didn't shoot the ball very well tonight (42-88). That was one key. Then down the stretch, Philly came up with the big play that we couldn't seem to muster at home. Hawkins took the ball to the hole very well down the stretch, when things could have gone either way.''

''We're big time now,'' said Barkley. ''If we win tomorrow (Detroit), I can see us in first place in a week or so, we're going in with confidence.''

Barkley scored 14 points in the first half and Gminski added 12 to pace the Sixers to a 43-42 halftime lead.

-- AROUND THE NBA --

Elsewhere, Detroit dumped Washington 99-85, Sacramento stoppe Orlando 114-100, Houston beat Phoenix 112-104, Charlotte clipped the LA Clippers 118-109 in overtime, Denver outscored Cleveland 131-125 and Utah jazzed Portland 119-102.

PISTONS 99, BULLETS 85

At Landover, Md., reserve Mark Aguirre scored 12 of his 18 points in the fourth quarter as Detroit extended its dominance over the Washington Bullets to 11 straight victories. Jeff Malone scored 19 points and Darrell Walker and Mark Alarie added 14 apiece for the Bullets.

KINGS 114 MAGIC 100

At Orlando, Fla., Wayman Tisdale led Sacramento on a late 13-4 scoring spree to lead the Kings. Tisdale totaled 24 points, the same as Orlando's Reggie Theus.

ROCKETS 112, SUNS 104

At Houston, Akeem Olajuwon scored 7 of his 41 points in the final 1:07 to lead the Rockets. Otis Thorpe added 24 points and 15 rebounds while Olajuwon had 14 rebounds as the Rockets, 25-31, ended a nine-game Phoenix winning streak.

HORNETS 118, CLIPPERS 109 OT

At Charlotte, N.C., Rex Chapman scored 21 points, including the last 5 points in regulation and 6 in overtime. Randolph Keys and Dell Curry scored 16 points each for the Hornets. The Clippers were led by Charles Smith who scored a game-high 29 points, including 17 in the fourth quarter.

NUGGETS 131, CAVALIERS 125

At Denver, Alex English led six Denver players in double figures with 26 points and the Nuggets outlasted the Cavaliers. Mark Price led Cleveland with 31 points but the Cavs were plagued by poor shooting in the fourth quarter (7-20). Joe Barry Carroll scored 23 points, Fat Lever 22 and Danny Schayes added 21 for the Nuggets. Cleveland got 23 points from Craig Ehlo, 19 points from Brad Daugherty, 18 points from John Williams and 12 from Steve Kerr.

JAZZ 119, TRAIL BLAZERS 102

At Salt Lake City, John Stockton collected 26 points and 21 assists to help the Jazz to their sixth straight victory. Thurl Bailey contributed 18 of his 24 points in the third quarter and Karl Malone finished with 17 points and 12 rebounds as Utah rolled to its 18th straight victory at the Salt Palace. Jerome Kersey and Kevin Duckworth had 21 points each for the Trail Blazers, who lost their fourth consecutive road game.

Boston Garden Thursday night wondering if they have what it takes to beat the Bruins at their home ice.

''We really did not want them to have any confidence when they left here '' Neely said after sparking Boston to a 5-3 triumph over its Adams Division rivals. ''We're concerned with other teams, but I think we feel like we can play with anyone when we play well.''

The victory moved the division-leading Bruins six points ahead of third-place Montreal and five in front of idle second-place Buffalo. Boston owns the NHL's best mark with 83 points.

''This was our biggest game of the year and we were up to the challenge,'' Boston defenseman Ray Bourque said. ''Tonight there was a little extra incentive. We really wanted to win this one.''

Neely continued his career year, scoring two goals and adding an assist.

The Bruins took control of the contest in the second period and maintained their edge the rest of the contest.

After Montreal tied it 2-2 on Mike McPhee's goal four minutes into the second period, Boston went ahead to stay on Dave Christian's goal 52 seconds later.

Neely, who reached his personal goal-scoring best with his 43rd Monday against the New York Rangers, made it 4-2 with his second goal of the game 43 seconds into the third period.

Dave Poulin scored a short-handed goal on a breakaway at 3:24 to make it 5-2 and Boston was well on its way to its fifth victory in six games.

''For us it was the biggest game of the year,'' said Montreal winger Mike McPhee, who scored twice. ''If we would have won this game we would have been only a couple points out of first.

''But it's not the end of the world. We still have our sights set on first. If we don't make it, we just want to peak for the playoffs.''

-- AROUND THE NHL --

Elsewhere, St. Louis defeated Chicago 6-4 and Philadelphia downed Calgary 4-2.

BLUES 6, BLACKHAWKS 4

At Chicago, Paul Cavallini scored two of his team's four first-period goals, and St. Louis held on to move into a first-place tie with the Blackhawks in the Norris Division. The Blues scored on three of their first six shots, making it a short night for goalie Alain Chevrier.

''Obviously, Chevrier was not ready to play tonight,'' Chicago Coach Mike Keenan said. ''That was very obvious.''

FLYERS 4, FLAMES 2

At Calgary, Alberta, Tim Kerr and Brian Propp each managed a goal and assist to give Philadelphia Flyers its first victory over the Flames in 11 games and its first in Calgary since Dec. 1985.

(MARCH 1) UPI - Michigan State has been keeping a secret and Thursday night it let No. 8 Michigan in on it.

The Spartans introduced Steve Smith to the Wolverines.

Smith, one of America's most unheralded players, scored 25 of his career-high 36 points in the second half and Michigan State posted a 78-70 victory over Michigan, taking over sole possession of first place in the Big Ten.

Matt Steigenga jammed home two baskets and added two free throws in the final 1:50 to put Michigan State, 23-5 and 12-3 in the conference, a half-game up on Purdue, 12-4. The Spartans host the Boilermakers in the final game of the regular season.

Michigan State, which along with Purdue have been the surprise teams in the Big Ten, was playing its first game without outside scoring threat Kirk Manns, who will miss the rest of the regular season with a stress fracture in his right foot.

''Even though we didn't have Manns,'' said Michigan State Coach Jud

Heathcote,''a lot of the plays we run for Manns we ran for Steve Smith. He came off screens and he was open.''

Mark Montgomery, taking Manns' spot in the lineup, scored 13, including a pair of three-pointers at the start of the game when Michigan came out in a surprise zone.

Steigenga had 12 for Michigan State while Ken Redfield did an excellent defensive job on Michigan's Rumeal Robinson and contributed 11 points.

''We miss Kirk Manns,'' Heathcote said after his team broke a five-game losing streak to Michigan, ''but a lot of guys took up the slack.''

Especially Smith, who equaled his career high. Smith made 13 of 21 shots and had eight points in a 10-point run that included two critical three-pointers midway through the second half that turned back a Michiagn rally.

Smith's 12-footer gave Michigan State a 50-47 lead, he then followed his own missed shot with a layup, then added a free throw when fouled to expand the lead to 53-47.

Steigenga's reverse layup made it 55-47 and Smith made a thee-pointer from the top of the key to complete a 10-0 Spartan run over 2:49. Smith's three-pointer made it 58-47 with 9:25 to play.

Smith stayed up late to review films of the Wolverines on Wednesday night.

''He wasn't going to let Michigan win again. We were going to win this time,'' Montgomery. said

''I'm not going to sleep too much tonight (Thursday night) either,'' Smith said.

Michigan, which fell to 20-6 and 10-5, was paced by Terry Mills, who scored 31 points, including 13 of 13 from the free-throw line. Loy Vaught and Robinson had 12 each for the Wolverines.

-- AROUND THE NCAA --

Elsewhere in the Top Twenty, Nevada-Las Vegas nipped Utah St. 84-82, co.-No. 15 Oregon St. downed Arizona St. 73-59, No. 19 New Mexico St. defeated Pacific 68-55, and No. 20 Minnesota topped Indiana 75-70.

At Logan, Utah, Larry Johnson scored 31 points, including the last 4 for the Runnin' Rebels who avoided the upset. David Butler added 24 points for UNLV, and the Rebels escaped with the victory when USU missed three shots in the closing 17 seconds. Las Vegas is 25-5 overall and 15-2 in the Big West. The Aggies dropped to 14-14 and 8-9. The second half of the game was delayed 10 minutes when a device containing green dye, and hidden in a floor grating doused Rebels Coach Jerry Tarkanian. The incident resulted in a technical foul on the USU bench for delay of game, and Johnson hit both free throws, the margin of victory.

At Tempe, Ariz., Gary Payton scored 12 of his 22 points in the second half to help the Beavers rally and clinch at least a share of the Pacific-10 Conference title. The victory sets up a showdown with second-place Arizona at Tucson Saturday. Earl Martin had 17 points for OSU, which boosted its overall record to 22-4, 15-2 in the conference. Arizona State, which lost its sixth straight, dropped to 12-14 and 5-12. Alex Austin led the Sun Devils with 23 points and 10 rebounds.

At Stockton, Calif., Michael New scored 16 points and Keith Hill added 11 to lead New Mexico State to the Big West victory. The Aggies, 24-3 overall and 15-2 in the conference, stayed tied for first place in the Big West with Nevada-Las Vegas. Pacific dropped to 14-12 and 7-10.

At Bloomington, Ind., Willie Burton scored nine of his 20 points in the final three minutes to help the Golden Gophers gain their fifth 20-win season in school history. Burton hit a three-pointer from the right wing with 1:50 remaining, giving the Gophers the lead for good at 70-68. Minnesota improved to 20-6 and 11-5. Kevin Lynch had 15 points and Melvin Newbern added 14 for the Gophers. Chuck Graham had 21 points and Calbert Cheaney added 18 for the Hoosiers, 16-9 and 6-9.

TOKYO (MARCH 2) UPI - Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu Friday warned that protectionism threatens the free trade system in a major policy speech to Parliament hours before his departure for talks with President Bush in California.

Trade issues were expected to be a top concern when Kaifu and Bush sit down for talks Friday and Saturday in Palm Springs.

''The world economic order is ... at an important watershed,'' Kaifu said in a speech to both houses of the Diet, or Parliament. ''The rising pressures of protectionism today threaten the very survival of that free trade system that has sustained our postwar prosperity.''

Bush's administration has been pushing for Japan to move more quickly to open its markets to foreign goods and help reduce America's nearly $50 billion annual trade deficit with Japan.

Members of Congress and some in the administration have been advocating a harder line against Japan, including imposition of trade sanctions if progress on the trade deficit is not made.

Kaifu, first elected prime minister in August and re-elected this week following the ruling Liberal Democratic Party's victory in the Feb. 18 general election, avoided making specific promises but pledged to ''make every possible effort for progress'' in the trade talks aimed at reducing the deficit.

Officials on both sides have described the Bush-Kaifu meeting as a relaxed shirt-sleeve get-together to review world events and perhaps play a round of golf.

The cheery scenario, however, belies the rapidly deteriorating trade relations between the world's top economic powers, which some analysts say could erupt into a full-scale trade war in the coming year.

The United States listed Tokyo as an unfair trader under the 1988 Trade Act and threatened economic retaliation unless it opens its markets to U.S. imports of supercomputers, satellites and forestry products.

On a broader scale, Washington is demanding Tokyo make concrete proposals by July to eliminate institutional barriers hampering U.S. trade and investment.

For the first time in U.S.-Japanese relations, Bush last week bypassed time-honored diplomatic channels by calling Kaifu in the middle of the night to invite the Japanese leader to a California summit within a week.

''It has never happened before,'' a senior foreign ministry official said. ''But I would like to interpret it as the friendship Mr. Bush has for the prime minister and Japan.

''There is no direct link between the trade talks and the president's call. The summit is not a D-Day for the process,'' said the official, who asked not to be identified.

A U.S. official who also requested anonymity, concurred, saying, ''The president is known for his personal touch. He just picks up the phone and calls leaders around the world to get together and talk.''

Japanese officials said Kaifu and Bush also planned to discuss East-West relations, pro-democracy movements in Eastern Europe, developments in Central America, China, Cambodia and security in Asia.

Kaifu's delegation was made up of his three top trade negotiators. U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills were also expected to be on hand.

NAIROBI, Kenya (MARCH 2) UPI - President Daniel Arap Moi has banned demonstrations in Kenya after mourning processions for the country's late foreign minister a week ago turned violent, national newspapers reported Friday.

In an impassioned speech late Thursday at a bus stop in the Kenyan capital where he was inaugurating a new fleet of buses, Moi also lashed out at those he said were undermining the state by spreading rumors and sedition.

The president accused former Assistant Minister for Planning Andrew Ngumba and former Rift Valley police chief James Mungai of spreading lies and hatching plots in luxury hotels and clubs around the country.

Ngumba has only recently returned to Kenya, having spent three years in self-imposed exile in Scandinavia. He sought political asylum in Sweden, declaring himself an opponent of the Kenyan government. In Kenya, however, he was accused of embezzlement.

''The days of rumormongers and other saboteurs are numbered and from now on, the police will move in and round up all of them,'' Moi said.

Demostrations are banned, Moi said, because hooligans exploited mourning ceremonies for Foreign Minister Robert Ouko and committed acts of vandalism and looting.

Riot police were deployed in several Kenyan towns a week ago after angry mobs, demanding an explanation for Ouko's mysterious death, stoned the security forces.

Ouko was found shot through the head and set on fire 14 days ago near his home in western Kenya, and the government has issued several calls for an end to speculation on the cause of his death.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Light showers scattered over the southern Plains, the Gulf Coast and the deep South Friday, clouds spread from the Pacific Northwest down to southern California and sleet pelted portions of the Middle Atlantic states.

The moderate rains dampened parts of east Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana as an upper-level disturbance moved through the region. A cold front that passed through the area kept temperatures cool.

A low-pressure system pushed rain clouds over most of the South. The heaviest showers were in Mississippi, Alabama and Tennessee, while light rain fell in the Carolinas and Georgia. Clouds covered Florida but there was little rain.

Temperatures in the South were mild, ranging form 43 degrees in Knoxville, Tenn., to 47 in Charleston, S.C., 52 in Atlanta, 55 in Jacksonville, Fla. and 71 in Miami.

Clouds spread over most of northern and central California, leading a weather system that was expected to bring rain to the region. Most of Oregon was sunny under the influence of a dry and warm air mass. But clouds persisted along the southern two-thirds of the coast and spread across the southwest interior.

Mostly clear skies prevailed over Pennsylvania, Maryland and southern New Jersey, with lows ranging from the upper teens to the upper 20s throughout the region.

Patches of light rain and sleet, however, fell on many areas of West Virginia overnight. Lows were in the 30s except in the northern and central mountain regions, where they dipped into the mid-teens to mid-20s. Accumulations between 1 and 2 inches precipitation were recorded at higher elevations.

A high-pressure system moved off the mid-Atlantic coast as skies across New England were mostly cloudy and temperatures hovered in the low 30s.

Clear skies were reported throughout the Midwest, except for Kentucky where light rain fell in some areas. Clear skies prevailed in Michigan, Missouri, Wisconsin and Illinois with temperatures in the low 30s,

(MARCH 2) UPI - Panamanian President Guillermo Endara blasted former General Noriega for leaving the country in a state of economic dispair. Endara said the state, under Noriega's rule, spent- quote- ''more money on arms than on books, more on guns than on vaccines.'' The new leader also commended President Bush, saying- ''He helped in our fight for freedom and we Panamanians will always remember that.''

President Bush restored tariff agreements with Panama Thursday that will allow the central American nation to receive preferential treatment for its exports to the United States. Trade relations between Panama and the United States were all but cut off while General Noriega was in power. The tariff agreement is expected to boost Panama's troubled economy.

The Justice Department has filed a civil rights suit against the Virginia Military Institute for its failure to admit women. The arrests began shortly after guards unfurled a banner reading ''License Approved,'' referring to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's decision to give the plant a full-power operating license. CHANDIGARH, India (MARCH 2) UPI - A bomb blast ripped through an express train sleeping car, killing one person and wounding 38 others in the second attack of its kind in one day by suspected Sikh separatists, police and railway officials said Friday.

The latest explosion occurred about 10:35 p.m. Thursday aboard the Shalimar Express during a stop in the station of Ambala, an industrial city in northern Haryana state located on the border with Punjab, 110 miles north of New Delhi.

A railway official reached by telephone in Ambala said the blast tore through a sleeper car, demolishing much of it. One person was killed and at least 38 others wounded, said the railway official and a police official in the joint Haryana-Punjab capital of Chandigarh.

The railway official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the train resumed its journey from New Delhi to Jammu, the winter capital of northern Jammu and Kashmir state, after a one-hour delay during which the damaged car was detached.

The police official, also speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the bomb was a timed device that would have exploded as the train approached the Punjab town of Ludhiana but its departure from New Delhi was delayed an hour.

He said the Ambala blast and an explosion aboard a train about 2:20 a.m. Thursday in Meerut, 30 miles northeast of New Delhi in Uttar Pradesh state were both believed to be the work of the Babar Khalsa, one of the main underground groups of Sikh extremists fighting for independence for Punjab.

At least five people died and 16 others were wounded in the explosion in Meerut aboard the Chattisgarh Express, which originated in the Sikh holy city of Amritsar in Punjab.

There were no claims of responsibility for the explosions.

Sikh extremists have been fighting since 1983 to create in Punjab the independent theocratic nation of ''Khalistan,'' or ''Land of the Pure,'' claiming their community is discriminated against by the Hindu-dominated central government.

More than 6,000 people have died in Sikh extremist-related unrest.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Ethiopia says a major famine is possible in the northern part of the country unless money is found for emergency transport of food. The region has been cut off by civil war. Relief officials are asking donor governments and international agencies for 14-Million dollars a month to fund airlifts and trucking from southern Ethiopia. Three-and-a-half-Million people are at risk of starvation.

Late Thursday, more than 500 gallons of heavy crude oil spilled from a Texaco barge into the Arthur Kill waterway at the massive Exxon Bayway refinery in Linden, New Jersey. It's the same site where a huge spill in January left 567-thousand tons of home heating oil in the water. A Coast Guard spokesman says clean-up crews are working to contain the spill. He notes this is the third spill in three months in the waters separating New Jersey from Staten Island.

(MARCH 2) UPI - It could only happen in the movies.

A band of hardy settlers persecuted for their religious beliefs makes a triumphant return to their hometown after being driven out following the death of their charismatic leader 144 years earlier.

That film fantasy has become fact in the western Illinois town of Nauvoo, once the capital of Mormon founding father Joseph Smith's city-state on the Mississippi River.

In a windswept grove of maples on the river's shore, Nauvoo residents are working shoulder to shoulder with Utah filmmakers to shoot ''Legacy,'' the saga of the Mormon prophet's martyrdom and his followers' great trek west.

The 40-minute film will be the centerpiece of a new theater in the Mormon Church's visitors' center in Salt Lake City. The multimillion dollar production is the most ambitious effort ever made to tell the story of the conflict and tragedy accompanying the founding of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, said director Keith Merrill.

''The story, oversimplified, is really a search for a new home. A young 13-year-old girl meets the Prophet Joseph Smith and he speaks to her of a promised land - a Zion, a place of peace,'' Merrill said. ''We pick them up in Missouri and follow them as they are driven from place to place before they settle in Salt Lake City.''

In 1839, Smith and thousands of converts thought their peaceful place would be Nauvoo. After a series of bloody conflicts with neighbors forced them to leave New York, Ohio and Missouri, they built a riverfront community of 12,000 residents that soon became the largest town in Illinois.

Mormons printed their own money, began work on a massive temple overlooking the Mississippi and formed their own army, the Nauvoo Legion.

Politicians courted the Mormons and their monolithic bloc of voters. But the converts' unorthodox religious practices and rumors Smith planned a military takeover of Illinois again led to bloodshed.

An angry mob killed the Mormon prophet and his brother in 1844 when they were called to the nearby town of Carthage to answer charges of treason, murder and arson. The Mormons abandoned Nauvoo two years later.

Today the town has dwindled to less than a thousand people, many of whom make their living serving the needs of modern Mormon pilgrims who flock to the restored remains of Joseph Smith's Zion.

Nauvoo was in its post-tourist winter doldrums when History Films of Salt Lake City came in November. Production crews converted vacant warehouses into sound stages and production offices and built a replica Mormon village on the banks of the Mississippi, hiring hundreds of townspeople as construction workers, cooks and extras.

''In some way I'm sure everyone in town's had something to do with the movie,'' said Nauvoo native Bonnie Trapp, who is working on the film along with eight members of her family. ''It's put a lot of guys back to work, especially in construction.''

Former ''Dynasty'' star Kathleen Beller stars as Eliza Williams Walker, the movie's heroine. The cast also features former ''Animal House'' star Tim Matheson as Joseph Smith.

Producers insist the film will be historically accurate and based on documented facts.

But authenticity is still a question for some historians, who feel the church has glossed over the sins of its past and placed blame for the exodus solely on Nauvoo's non-Mormon neighbors.

They said guides at other church-operated museums sharply slant history.

''It's really kind of spooky,'' said John Simmons, professor of religious studies at Western Illinois University. ''There's not one thing said about some very real historical facts. But they obviously firmly believe in their point of view and ... want to present their leader and their history in the best possible light.''

BEIJING (MARCH 2) UPI - China, appearing to belatedly confirm reports of a renewed crackdown on the nation's journalists, published Friday a 3-month-old speech by the Communist Party leader calling for sharply tighter control over the state news media.

''Leadership of the press should be firmly held by Marxists,'' said Communist Party General Secretary Jiang Zemin in the lengthy speech, carried by the official Xinhua news agency and government dailies.

''There is no absolute and unlimited press freedom in any country,'' Jiang said. ''No freedom should be granted to illegal journalistic activities aimed at altering the socialist system.

''Punishment according to law should be meted out to those involved in such activities.''

Jiang's address, aimed at the nation's state-run newspapers, magazines and broadcast stations, was delivered last Nov. 28 at a government seminar on journalism, Xinhua said. The dispatch gave no indication as to why it was withheld.

But the speech also followed publication last week of similar remarks made in December by Wang Renzhi, director of the party Propaganda Department, in which he vehemently assailed the editorial leadership of the official press.

The attacks appeared to confirm accounts from Chinese journalists that officials have recently renewed a crackdown on their reporting activities and political attitudes, under close scrutiny since the violent suppression last June of the pro-democracy movement.

Last spring, reporters and editors from leading media outlets defied martial law to join the massive street protests. Many at the same time rebelled against censorship, in some cases publishing unauthorized accurate accounts of the unrest.

After a lull last fall, journalists say, investigations by police and party officials have resumed or intensified in recent months, largely aimed at purging those involved in last year's incidents.

One reporter from a leading daily was detained by police last month, journalists said. Chief editors of two leading publications, the Legal Daily and the Literature Gazette, have recently been replaced by conservatives, and junior staffers have been demoted.

Journalists at several Beijing dailies say they have been told to minimize their own reporting and in many cases carry only dispatches from Xinhua, the state news agency. In some newsrooms, one reporter said, ''all they do is read the papers and drink tea.''

''This government is a spiritual bankruptcy,'' one disgusted veteran journalist said. ''We're all telling lies to each other.''

In his speech, Jiang sharply attacked the unruly behavior of the state media last spring, saying that at the time, ''some media units were controlled'' by people he charged were ''trying to negate and shake off the party's leadership over journalism.''

From now on, he said, the state media ''will never be allowed to disseminate bourgeois liberalization,'' the official catchphrase for Western political and cultural influences, such as the concept of democracy.

Jiang issued reminders that under communism, the media are ''mouthpieces'' of the party and government. Chinese editors routinely practice self-censorship and often seek permission from propaganda officials before carrying potentially controversial items.

Chinese journalists have noted the leadership is acutely sensitive over news on the recent liberalizations in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Newspapers and broadcast stations have been told to use only Xinhua dispatches for such coverage, they said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The index of leading economic indicators, saved by a surge in building permits, was unchanged in January after two consecutive monthly increases, the Commerce Department announced Friday.

The government uses the index, which studies 11 areas of the economy, to predict future activity. Private analysts had expected a gain of between 0.1 percent and 0.3 percent for last month.

The Commerce Department also revised its December indicators index down to an increase of 0.6 percent from an increase of 0.8 percent, based on orders for consumer goods.

In November, the closely watched gauge of economic activity edged up by 0.1 percent.

During January, three of the 11 indicators scored increases, seven showed declines and the category of average workweek remained the same, the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis said in its monthly report.

Building permits - reflecting the warm January weather after December's paralyzing deep freeze - led the way, followed by vendor performance and manufacturers orders, the Commerce Department said.

Vendor performance tracks delivery time.

On the downside, from the largest negative contributor to the smallest:

-Manufacturers' new orders for consumer goods;

-Money supply;

-Contracts and orders for plant and equipment;

-Stock prices;

-Change in sensitive materials prices;

-Index of consumer expectations;

-Average weekly initial claims for state unemployment insurance.

For the 12-month period ending in January, the overall index was down bu 0.5 percent compared to an increase of 4.8 percent for the period a year earlier, the Commerce Department said.

For six months, the index was up by 0.8 percent, compared to a drop of 0.7 percent for the previous six months, the department said.

The composite index of coincident indicators, a monthly approximation of aggregate economic activity, fell by 0.7 percent in January to 133, after increasing by 0.2 percent in December and 0.5 percent in November.

The composite of lagging indicators dropped by 0.5 percent in January to 119, after increasing by 0.2 percent in December and decreasing by 0.1 percent in November.

The ratio of coincident and lagging indicators stood at 110.9 for January, after finishing at 111.1 in December and November, the department said.

JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA (MARCH 2) UPI - South Africa's Jewish community says it would welcome an opportunity to meet with black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela in the wake of his comments that black South Africans and Palestinians live under the same ''unique form of colonialism.''

Jewish leaders said they were surprised by Mandela's comments made after embracing PLO chief Yasser Arafat in Lusaka, Zambia.

In a statement released Thursday, the South African Jewish Board of Deputies and South African Zionist Federation said the situation in other countries was not relevant to developments in South Africa, adding that Israel was ''totally non-racial.''

''Unfortunately she has as neighbors a number of nations such as Syria, Iraq and Iran, which are still in a state of war with her and openly committed to her destruction,'' the statement said. ''Although the Palestine Liberation Organization recently referred to peace negotiations, it has still not renounced its covenant, which is committed to the elimination of the Jewish state.''

In an editorial Friday, the Afrikaans newspaper Beeld said that there were ''deep-rooted similarities'' between Israeli Jews and the white minority in South Africa, including their desire to survive among people whose attitude ''is often, rightly or wrongly, experienced as hostile.''

''What Mr. Mandela apparently does not realize is the great differences in the manner in which the problem is tackled,'' wrote Beeld, which is closely aligned with the South African government. ''Where the Israelis approach the Palestinian uprising mainly as a military problem, the republic (of South Africa) has realized that a political solution has become essential.

''That is why nowadays there is rather talk than shooting - something that is not yet happening in Israel,'' the newspaper wrote.

South Africa's Jewish community of an estimated 100,000 is a small fraction of the population of 5 million whites, but it wields considerable influence in the country's economy.

The South African government also has enjoyed a close relationship with the Israeli military through the years of an international sanctions campaign.

Under U.S. pressure, Israel agreed in 1987 not to sign any new military contracts with Pretoria, but refused to terminate existing ones. There also were reports last year of Israeli assistance in the design of a long-range South African missile.

In Lusaka this week, Mandela embraced Arafat and compared their two struggles ''against a unique form of colonialism.'' Asked Wednesday whether he believed his comments threatened to alienate South Africa's Jewish community, Mandela said, ''Well, if the truth alienates the powerful Jewish community in South Africa that is too bad.''

Mandela continued by saying that he expected anyone exploring the possibility of lasting solutions be ''able to face the truth squarely.''

The statement by South African Jewish leaders said they would welcome ''an opportunity for dialogue with Mr. Mandela on the issue.''

Harry Schwarz, a Democratic Party member of Parliament who said he did not believe Mandela was anti-Semitic, said the Jewish community has been attacked by ultra-right-wing movements, particularly for its opposition to apartheid.

''It would be ironic if now they are attacked by those they have sought to support,'' he told the Johannesburg daily, The Star.

(MARCH 2) UPI - A strike against Greyhound bus lines... President Bush meets with Japan's Prime Minister... a compromise on clean air legislation... and baby boomers dominate the population. Those stories and more, next from U-P-I.

Greyhound's unionized employees went on strike this morning. But officials of the nation's largest inter-city bus line say replacement drivers will maintain limited service. More than nine-thousand union employees of Greyhound went on strike after a day of marathon negotiations failed to produce a new contract to replace the one that expired at midnight.

The union told its 63-hundred drivers to park their buses at the nearest terminals.

But Greyhound spokesman George Gravley says replacement drivers, hired in the past month, are in place. He says the company will maintain limited service, aiming to restore full service by the end of March.

Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions spokesman Jeffrey Nelson says the strike was called because the company has refused to bargain in good faith and at midnight, unilaterally imposed its January 10th contract offer.

The president of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Workers, Edward Strait, says job security is one of the major issues that stalled negotiations.

In addition to the bus drivers... the union represents 14-hundred 75 maintenance workers and 16-hundred 60 office workers in telephone information centers in Omaha, Nebraska, and Charlotte, North Carolina, and the accounting center in West Des Moines, Iowa.

Greyhound serves about 95-hundred communities in the 48 continental states and says it provides the only public transportation to about nine-thousand communities that have NO airline or rail passenger service.

Greyhound says the average full-time bus driver earned 24-thousand 743 dollars last year.

(MARCH 2) UPI - President Bush is getting ready for two days of talks with the leader of Japan, the nation that causes the most frustrations over trade.

Bush will host Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu in Palm Springs, California, today and tomorrow. It will be their second meeting in six months.

Bush arranged the meeting last week- hours after trade talks stalled in Tokyo. U-S officials say Bush plans to pressure Kaifu into concessions designed to head off an economic confrontation between the two countries.

In a speech to both houses of Japan's parliament today just hours before his departure for the United States... Kaifu warned that protectionism threatens the free trade system. Kaifu told parliament the rising pressures of protectionism today threaten the survival of the free trade system that has sustained Japan's prosperity since World War Two.

Shortly after Kaifu's speech, Japan's Finance Ministry reported that the nation's current account balance in January posted the first deficit in six years. Imports soared more than 20 percent, while exports decreased about five percent from one year earlier.

The U-S trade deficit with Japan has stood at roughly 50-BILLION dollars since the mid-1980's... largely because of Japan's limits on imports.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - A section of Sunset Boulevard collapsed, creating a 4-foot-deep hole in the street that damaged five cars before it was roped off early Friday, authorities said.

No one was seriously hurt but one driver complained of back and leg injuries.

''It's not a pothole and it's not a chuckhole,'' said Officer K. Cannon. ''It's broken. There are chunks of pavement laying in the hole and it is cracked and sloped.

''It's just a dark hole. It's not something that you commonly see on the road.''

The hole, 4 feet deep, 6 feet wide and 4 feet long, developed in a westbound outside lane of Sunset in the Pacific Palisades area late Thursday night. The area, about 15 miles west of Hollywood, was cordoned off by police.

The drivers of a Mercedes-Benz and a Cadillac hit the hole hard, suffered damaged steering and blown tires, Cannon said.

He said at least three other cars hit the hole but were able to drive away.

Cannon said city street crews were called to the scene. A storm drain may have been responsible for creating the hole, but the actual cause of the collapse remained unclear.

Police said drivers were unable to see the hole because the nearest street light was more than 140 feet away.

(MARCH 2) UPI - President Bush says he hopes the American business community will lend a hand to the emerging democracies.

In a speech in Los Angeles to the California Chamber of Commerce last night, Bush appealed to business leaders to make their free-market experience ''a force for good'' by helping Eastern Europe and Central America.

Bush has sent teams of economic experts to Poland, Hungary and Panama. But he has yet to decide how to marshal public and private resources to foster greater political and economic reform in such other countries as Czechoslovakia, Romania and Nicaragua.

In place of direct aid... the administration has emphasized the need for private investment and for technical expertise to help those countries move from state-managed economies to freer markets.

Earlier in the day, Bush restored lowest-possible tariff treatment for imports from Panama. Panama's exports include bananas, pineapples and sugar. The preferential tariff treatment is to help Panama's economic recovery and to reward the U-S-installed government's commitment to fight drug trafficking.

In addition to Panama, Bush certified 18 other nations as having ''fully co-operated'' in anti-drug efforts... making them eligible for U-S aid. Those nations include Mexico. Bush denied certification to Afghanistan, Burma, Iran and Syria.

Bush also helped dedicate a state-of-the-art jail built with local tax money in Los Angeles County. Bush sounded a call for more prisons and tougher laws.

He denied reports that the United States is participating in secret talks aimed at winning freedom for eight Americans being held hostage in Lebanon. The president repeated that the U-S will NOT negotiate with terrorists.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Senate leaders and the Bush administration say they've reached agreement on clean air legislation.

Senate majority leader George Mitchell hailed the bipartisan compromise to reduce acid rain, toxic emissions and urban smog as more extensive than present laws.

But critics attacked the package that will go to the entire Senate next week, saying the proposed legislation caters to big business rather than to the health of Americans.

New Jersey Democrat Frank Lautenberg blasted the compromise, arguing that it makes it impossible for him to meet campaign promises he made to clean up the environment.

Environmental groups also teed off on the compromise. A lobbyist for the Sierra Club says the tentative legislation does NOT address the problem of smog in large cities.

President Bush pushed aside the criticism and described the bill as ''a big forward step'' and the ''best in bipartisanship.''

As the nation's Census Bureau gears itself up for this year's people count the agency sends word that the largest segment of the U-S population falls between the ages of 25-34.

During the course of the past nine years, the federal government has conducted surveys that point out there are nearly 44-Million people in the 25-34 age group. But the government says aging of baby boomers will thin out the ranks in that age group.

This trend is already visible in the fact that the median U-S age is now 32-point-three years, up from 30 years in 1980.

The Census Bureau report also says that America's black population has for the first time surpassed the 30-Million mark.

African-Americans make up 12-point-three percent of the total U-S population, while Hispanics comprise eight percent of the population.

Statisticians also say there was growth in the latter part of the decade in the five to 13 age bracket as many of the ''thirtysomething'' generation had children.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Despite all attempts made by the U-S government to combat illegal drug trafficking, the State Department says growth and trade of illicit narcotics increased last year around the globe.

A State Department report says that the increase in the world-wide drug trade stems from corrupt officials who are vulnerable to drug traffickers' bribes.

The report says such corruption appears to exist in the Bahamas, Laos, Thailand, Jamaica, Cuba, Bolivia and Haiti.

The United States has convinced several of these countries to join in the anti-drug effort, but the success of the program has been diluted by corruption at various levels.

However, the report was NOT entirely dismal. It said law enforcement officials had a banner year last year for drug arrests and seizures. There was also increased international co-operation to stem drug money laundering.

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM (MARCH 2) UPI -Proposals on the NATO role of a unified Germany are ''artificial'' because they do not address the big picture of European unity, the Czechoslovak foreign minister said Friday, the eve of his first NATO visit.

Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier was asked about a compromise proposal to keep a united Germany within NATO but bar NATO troops from the present territory of East Germany.

''I think all the proposed solutions are artificial,'' he said.

''All solutions have to be viewed from the perspective of European unity '' he told a news conference at headquarters of the 12-nation European Community. ''We should use the unification of Germany as a step to speeding up the process.

''The question of Germany, the question of boundaries cannot be resolved as a single issue,'' he said. ''The whole question should be resolved as soon as possible within the framework of the Helsinki conference.''

The 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, which adopted the Helsinki Accord in 1975, is slated to convene this fall to address the past year's startling changes in Central and Eastern Europe.

Dienstbier's comments reflected a growing feeling in Europe that the proposed compromise plan for a united Germany's NATO role, at first hailed for its simplicity, is fraught with difficulties and represents only a temporary solution.

''What about the question of young men from East Germany and their role in a single German army within NATO?'' asked a Danish diplomat, outlining one potential problem.

The Czechloslovak foreign minister, who met Friday with EC officials, meets on Saturday morning with NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner.

It will be only the second meeting at NATO headquarters involving a Warsaw Pact foreign minister, following last December's visit by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

The issue of Germany's relationship with NATO is seen as the thorniest in upcoming talks on German unification, first involving the two Germanys and then the Big Four allies of World War II - France, Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union.

The United States supports the compromise plan that would keep a unified Germany in NATO, with no NATO troops in the current territory of East Germany, while the Soviets seek a neutral German state.

U.S. diplomats only two weeks ago predicted the Soviets would go along with the compromise proposed by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich

Genscher, but Soviet insistence on neutrality has since hardened.

Dienstbier said the two alliances, NATO and the Warsaw Pact, do not ''answer or respond to the necessities of the present situation'' in Europe.

He called on the upcoming 35-nation conference to ''start the creation of new all-Europe institutions.''

The government uses the index, which studies 11 areas of the economy, to predict future activity. Private analysts had expected a gain of between 0.1 percent and 0.3 percent for last month.

Norman Robertson, chief economist for Mellon Bank in Pittsburgh, warned against placing too much weight on the data. "We just continue see an endless parade of conflicting and confusing economic signals," Robertson said. "The economy is still on the weak side, but it is on a positive growth track."

The Commerce Department also revised its December indicators index down to an increase of 0.6 percent from an increase of 0.8 percent, based on orders for consumer goods. In November, the closely watched gauge of economic activity edged up by 0.1 percent.

TOKYO (MARCH 2) UPI - Japan appears ready to return to China a leader of last year's democracy demonstrations in Tiananmen Square who hijacked a plane to escape persecution, the hijacker's attorneys said Friday.

''It is most likely Zhang Zhenhai will be executed as well as subjected to torture and inhuman treatment if he is extradited to China,'' said Makoto Kondo, one of five Japanese lawyers who volunteered to defend Zhang.

The lawyers said the government has already decided to return Zhang even though his court appeals have not been exhausted.

Zhang, 36, along with his wife and son, hijacked an Air China Boeing 747 with 223 people aboard Dec. 16 and commandeered it to Fukuoka Airport in southern Japan.

The hijacking ended when a member of the Air China crew pushed Zhang from an open door to the tarmac. Zhang broke his pelvis and both legs and was hospitalized while his wife and son were returned to China within hours.

Zhang had no weapons when he hijacked the plane and hurt no one, his attorneys said. Zhang saw hijacking as his only hope to escape political imprisonment in China, they said.

Japan views Zhang's case as a criminal matter and has said he should be returned to China to stand trial for hijacking.

On Tuesday the Justice Ministry turned down Zhang's request for political asylum.

China formally requested Feb. 12 that Zhang be extradited. The Tokyo High Court has two months to decide whether to comply.

But Zhang's attorneys said it appears the case has already been decided.

''The very fact that the Japanese government has decided to extradite before the conclusion of the court case is a neglect of the judicial branch by the executive branch,'' Kazuo Itoh, one of Zhang's attorneys, told a news conference at the Foreign Correspondents Club of Japan.

''We don't think it is a lost cause, but we will have to put up a tough fight,'' said Yaeko Takeoka, another attorney.

The attorneys said they have witnesses who will testify that Zhang was an organizer and participant in demonstrations and fought to stop tanks from entering Tiananmen Square in June.

''Zhang was then pursued by the Chinese public security bureau and interrogated about the Tiananmen incident,'' Kondo said. ''In order to escape punishment, Zhang tried to escape abroad twice but failed.

''He felt he had no choice but to hijack the airplane,'' he said.

''As far as the government is concerned, he has committed a crime of hijacking'' and should be tried in China, said Taizo Watanabe, the chief spokesman for the Foreign Ministry.

''The Chinese side is going to punish him according to the law,'' he said.

Zhang's attorneys said the fate of Zhang's wife and child are a concern. Zhang has been asking to contact them but has not been allowed to, the said.

''They were sent back to China and we have never heard from them,'' said Kondo.

The Foreign Ministry's Watanabe said the Chinese government has assured Japan the wife and son are all right and not in jail.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - President Bush arranged Friday to host Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu for a two-day desert summit coinciding with mounting trade tensions that threaten to erupt on both sides of the Pacific.

The president stood ready to apply some gentle arm-twisting at the hastily arranged summit meeting in Palm Springs, Calif., the second session between the two leaders in six months.

The summit will be held in true Bush style - a relaxed setting and wide open discussions - and the agenda focusing on the trade disputes between the two economic superpowers.

Bush arranged the meeting last week hours after high-stakes trade talks stalled in Tokyo, and U.S officials said he plans to press Kaifu into concessions designed to head off an economic confrontation between the two countries.

"We expect Prime Minister Kaifu will come to understand the strength of our concern in this area and the personal involvement of the president in trying to improve our trade imbalance with Japan," said White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater when asked Thursday if Bush intended to "lean on" Kaifu. "We will express our position in a very straightforward, productive fashion," Fitzwater said.

Officials on both sides ruled out concrete proposals emerging from the talks, although Japan is sending its top three trade negotiators with Kaifu. U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills are also expected to attend.

Kaifu, in an address to both houses of the Japanese Diet just hours before leaving for California, warned against giving in to protectionist sentiment. "The world economic order is ... at an important watershed," Kaifu said. "The rising pressures of protectionism today threaten the very survival of that free trade system that has sustained our postwar prosperity."

Taizo Watanabe, chief spokesman for the Foreign Ministry, said, "If either side is thinking of concessions, those concessions should not be talked about in the summit."

Washington and Tokyo have held talks on a dozen issues to reduce the U.S. trade deficit with Japan, which has stood at roughly $50 billion since the mid-1980s.

In the "structural impediment" talks, the now-stalled discussions that precipitated the Bush invitation, Tokyo is being pressed to agree to basic changes to ease the way for more U.S. imports of supercomputers, satellites and forestry products.

Those discussions, which are supposed to produce an interim report by April and a final draft by July, have, so far, disappointed Bush administration officials, who complain about a lack of "political guidance" on the Japanese side.

Bush appeared hopeful that Kaifu, fresh off re-election, can initiate the leadership to take the steps demanded by Washington and avert, according to some analysts, the possibility of a full-scale trade war.

"It's timely because he has just solidified his position ... just been reannointed and I've mentioned that we've got to move forward on some of the tough problems," Bush said.

One concern among officials of both countries is that Congress - with many members up for re-election this fall - will mandate tough measures if the Japan-U.S. trade climate does not improve.

As Bush spoke in California, Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., who based his failed 1988 presidential bid on his knowledge of trade issues, urged the president to win a promise from Kaifu to eliminate the trade imbalance within five years.

The high-level talks will accomplish virtually nothing if they don't focus on specific goals, Gephardt said in Washington. "American workers want a results-oriented trade policy."

"The Japanese government should join and honor an agreement that would boost American exports to Japan with an eye toward eliminating our bilateral trade deficit within five years," the congressman said.

ATHENS, GREECE (MARCH 2) UPI - Iranian exile groups said Friday anti-government demonstrators in Tehran have clashed with the elite Revolutionary Guards in the past few days.

There was no independent confirmation of the latest reports.

Reports of earlier protests were confirmed by Tehran residents, but Iran has acknowledged only that angry soccer fans rioted Feb. 16 when matches were cancelled. Thursday, spiritual leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei blasted the Western media for spreading what he described as rumors about unrest in Iran.

The Mojahedin Khalq organization, a group opposed to Iran's ruling clerics based in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad, said Friday demonstrations and clashes occurred Tuesday in south Tehran's Railway Square, a relatively poor district.

A Mojahedin statement received in Athens said the crowds chanted ''Death to the Khomeini regime,'' and ''Death to Rafsanjani and Khamenei,'' a reference to President Akbar Hashemi-Rafsanjani and the spiritual leader.

The demonstrations ''took a violent turn'' when armed guards intervened and arrested some of the protesters, the Mojahedin said.

Despite clashes, pro-Mojahedin demonstrators assembled in Fatemi Street in central Tehran and shouted slogans in support of Massoud Rajavi, the leader of the Mojahedin Khalq group, the statement said.

In another report, a clandestine radio broadcasting in Persian from outside Iran said demonstrations by people demanding freedom and the rule of law continued in the Iranian capital.

On Monday, the rebel radio said one person was killed and several injured when demonstrators defied revolutionary guards who tried to break up their protests in central Tehran.

The radio said the crowds chanted ''Iran, Iran,'' ''Freedom, freedom,'' and ''Independence, freedom, the rule of law,'' smashing the windows of shops displaying pictures of the ruling clerics.

The last slogan was a pun on the slogan ''Independence, freedom, Islamic Republic,'' which crowds supporting the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini chanted 11 years ago during demonstrations against the Shah.

In its statement Friday, the Mojahedin also reported that demonstrations took place in central Tehran Sunday, but said the crowds chanted slogans in support of Rajavi.

Khamenei on Thursday said in an address to Revolutionary Guards that the reports circulated by foreign radios and Western news agencies were based on information supplied by opponents of the government and were aimed at weakening the foundations of the Islamic Republic.

Last week, the Tehran newspaper Kayhan quoted Chief Justice Ayatollah Mohammad Yazdi as saying people who caused disruption would be executed.

Yazdi said: ''Those who disrupt the security of the people and damage the social environment should be treated as warriors against God.'' Under Khomeini's directions, such people deserved the death penalty, he said.

VANDALIA, IL (MARCH 2) UPI - A small earthquake struck Southern Illinois early Friday and was felt at least 60 miles away in St. Louis but there were no reports of damage, state and local officials said.

The quake occurred at 1:02 a.m. and was measured at 3.4 on the open-ended Richter Scale, said a spokesman for the National Earthquake Information Center in Boulder, Colo.

The center of the quake was about 10 miles south of Vandalia near the line between Fayette and Marion counties.

Mary Duis, a dispatcher for the Marion County sheriff's department in Salem, said she received four calls shortly after the quake.

''I heard from every little town around here,'' she said. ''It was a rumbling like you would hear if a train goes by.''

A spokesman in Carlyle in neighboring Clinton County said no damage had been reported.

Scott Michell, a research assistant in St. Louis University's Earth and Atmospheric Sciences Department, said he received calls from people who had felt the quake near St. Louis, which is about 60 miles from the epicenter.

''A quake of 3.4 is on the low side of the scale but it's enough to be felt and shake people up,'' he said. ''From the number of calls I've gotten this morning, I know some people felt it.''

A spokesman for Illinois Emergency Services in Springfield said no reports of damage had been received.

SRINAGAR, INDIA (MARCH 2) UPI - Indian authorities, fearing unrest on an Islamic holiday coinciding with the most important Moslem prayers of the week, imposed an indefinite curfew Friday on the Kashmir Valley, a day after troops killed at least 60 pro-independence protesters.

State radio announced the curfew at 4 a.m., calling it a ''precautionary measure.''

''We expected large-scale violence after Friday midday prayers in retaliation to yesterday's army firing,'' a senior police official said.

Friday marked the climax of a weeklong observance of Miraj, an Islamic holiday and one of the few times each year when a hair - believed to be from the beard of the Prophet Mohammed - is displayed at the Hazrat Bal, the most sacred shrine in predominantly Moslem Kashmir.

Srinagar's chief Moslem cleric, Moulvi Farooq, called Thursday's killings ''brutal and barbaric'' and said imposing a curfew on an important day of prayer was ''an act of naked aggression.''

In New Delhi, three members of Parliament from the former Jammu and Kashmir state ruling party urged Prime Minister V.P. Singh to order a high-level judicial commission to investigate Thursday's killings.

The three, who staged a day-long sit-in on the lawns of the national Parliament building, also called for the dismissal of Gov. Jagmohan, who assumed control of Jammu and Kashmir state Jan. 20 after the resignation of the National Conference-led administration.

''We can assure you that no amount of repression by the present governor's administration can achieve the goal that it has set before itself,'' said a memorandum the trio submitted to Singh.

The deaths occurred in Srinagar, the summer capital of Jammu and Kashmir state 400 miles north of New Delhi, as more than 800,000 Moslems flooded the city to demand independence for Kashmir in the region's largest outpouring of anti-Indian sentiment since the end of British rule in 1947.

Secession is supported by virtually all of the region's 3 million Moslems, who share a perception that their interests have been ignored by the Hindu-dominated central government.

The curfew imposed Friday brought normal life in Kashmir to a virtual standstill. Most residents remained indoors, although small groups defied the government and went to tiny mosques in the maze-like center of Srinagar.

A state information officer said that Hyder Pora - the scene of Thursday's worst incident - and the adjacent militant stronghold of Batamaloo were declared out of bounds to non-residents.

Witnesses said soldiers seized from demonstrators a flag of the Jammu and Kashmir Liberation Front, the most popular underground Moslem separatist group. The move provoked a clash in which the troops opened fire, killing at least 18 people and wounding seven others, police said.

Later, a rock barrage by slogan-shouting protesters prompted paramilitary police to open fire in Hyder Pora, killing at least 12 people and wounding 45 others, state radio said. However, a senior police official said the actual death toll was at least 42 and he said troops were responsible.

A lawyer who lives near Hyder Pora said he saw from his house a body still lying in a roadway Friday. He tried without success to notify authorities by telephone, he said.

It was the worst bloodletting in the two-year history of the independence drive that erupted on Jan. 20 erupted into a popular uprising after security forces killed 35 protesters.

More than 160 people have died since then, most of them demonstrators shot by security forces.

Tens of thousands of troops and paramilitary personnel were deployed across the Kashmir Valley to curb the uprising.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Sales of new single-family homes plunged 7.1 percent in January to an annual rate of 589,000 from 634,000 in December, while the median price jumped by nearly $2,000, the government reported Friday.

Home sales were also off by 8.4 percent in December, from 692,000 in November, the report said. The revised rate for January 1989 was 704,000, the report added. The figures were adjusted for seasonal factors such as the weather.

Before these adjustments, an estimated 44,000 new homes were sold in January, at a median sales price of $127,000, according to the report compiled by the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development. January's average sales price was $152,600, the report said.

"At the end of January, there were 365,000 new houses for sale," the departments said. "After a seasonal adjustment, this represents a supply of 7.3 months."

In December, the revised median price for a new single-family home was $125,200 and the average price was $157,200, compared to $125,000 and $151,800 in November and $123,000 and $147,800 in October, the government said.

In January 1989, the revised median price was $113,000 and the average price was $138,600, the government said. For all of 1989, the revised figures are $120,000 and $148,800, compared to $112,500 and $138,300 in 1988.

On Thursday, the Commerce Department said housing starts helped boost new construction by 1.8 percent during January's warm spell to an annual rate of $424 billion - the biggest increase in 13 months.

That report revealed private construction, which includes new homes, increased in January to $333.1 billion from $321.7 billion in December, or by 3.5 percent.

JERUSALEM (MARCH 2) UPI - The Israeli military censor announced broad new restrictions on domestic media and foreign correspondents Friday, requiring that all stories on the immigration of Soviet Jews to Israel be submitted for review.

The move came a day after Secretary of State James Baker threatened to oppose funding to help provide housing for Soviet Jews unless Israel agreed to halt the expansion of Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, racked in recent years by the Palestinian uprising against Israeli rule.

''The Israel Defense Forces censor announces that all material pertaining to immigration of Soviet Jews must be submitted to the censor prior to publication,'' the Military Censor's office announced Friday.

A spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Avi Pazner, said the censorship decision had been made because of ''physical threats against the immigrants and immigration,'' but declined to elaborate.

Pazner said the new regulation had been discussed for some time by Cabinet ministers and the decision made before Baker's remarks. He said it would be announced officially by the Cabinet on Sunday.

Shamir, currently embroiled in a dispute within his right-wing Likud Party said the Baker linkage between the Soviet immigration and settlement in the territories ''was unnecessary.''

Officials in the Jerusalem office of the Military Censor said they were not allowed to comment on the announcement of the new censorship rule or provide any guidelines on what material would be censored.

Robert Slater, chairman of the Foreign Press Association, said Israeli officials were concerned about news reports containing the number of Soviet emigres arriving and those describing how they traveled to Israel.

Arab governments have sharply criticized the Soviet Union for liberalizing its emigration laws and permitting the mass departure of Jews.

Slater, a Time magazine correspondent, said he believed mounting Arab outrage over the wave of immigration, ''wild statements'' by Israeli officials on the number of immigrants expected and Baker's remarks were behind the new requirement.

Israeli officials have repeatedly said that less than 1 percent of the immigrants settle in the occupied territories and that no government policy exists to direct them there.

Nevertheless, the immigration of Soviet Jews has raised fears among Palestinian residents of the territories that they will be displaced by the newcomers.

Slater said Israeli officials fears the Soviet Union will stop Soviet Jews from coming to Israel because of the mounting international attention.

''It's a case of trying to clamp down on a problem in which all the facts are out,'' he said. Last year, 12,900 Soviets came to Israel, according to government figures. As many as 100,000 were estimated to arrive this year. But this week, an unidentified official said 230,000 could come this year.

Before being issued Israeli press credentials, all journalists must sign a statement agreeing to obey censorship laws. Usually only stories involving national security or details about the military are required to be submitted to the censor.

''It is not a clear case of Israeli lives being endangered,'' Slater said. ''It seems to be a perception of the Israeli government that it can control political events through the military censor.''

Censoring stories on immigration is not unprecedented in Israel. In the 1950s and 1960s, the government required stories on Soviet immigration to be reviewed. Stories on immigrants from Romania and Ethiopia have also been censored.

LONDON (MARCH 2) UPI - The political fortunes of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher plunged further Friday with the release of an opinion poll showing her Conservative Party 18.5 percent behind the opposition Labor Party, its lowest standing in 19 years.

The survey undertaken by Gallup for the Daily Telegraph newspaper indicated Thatcher's slide was due to a controversial new tax and her refusal to lower interest rates to spur economic growth.

The poll put the Labor Party of Neil Kinnock at 49.5 percent, a rise of 1.5 percent from two previous polls by Gallup and another survey group.

It placed the Conservatives at 31 percent, its lowest standing since September 1971.

The centrist Liberal Democrats have 7 percent, the environmentalist Green party 5.5 percent and others 7 percent, it said.

The survey conducted during the past month showed 65 percent of people were dissatisfied with Thatcher as a prime minister. But there was also an increase to 46 percent of people who did not think Kinnock was a good leader.

The survey reflected views by political analysts that the poll tax issue - which has inspired dissent within the governing party and public resistance where the levy has already been implemented in Northern Ireland and Scotland - is becoming a political crisis for Thatcher.

The poll tax is set by local councils and replaces property taxes, which Thatcher maintains are inefficient, expensive to collect and unfair because landlords are made to bankroll the costs of the community.

A poll tax will increase government revenue and is in keeping with her philosophy that all citizens should fund essential services.

Eighteen Conservative local councilors resigned to protest the tax that will be extended to England and Wales in April, prompting Thatcher on Thursday to blame local councils for inflating the tax sum, which on a national average will be about $630 a head.

However, 73 percent of people interviewed by Gallup said they believed they would be worse off under the new tax scheme.

''The government is clearly being damaged by the poll tax, even though no one in England and Wales has yet paid it,'' the newspaper reported.

''More people now think Labor will win the next election than think the Conservatives will,'' it said. ''Voters' predictions are often a good guide not just to their thinking, but to the political talk they are hearing around them.''

Critics say the poll tax is kinder to the rich at the expense of the poor, citing instances of childless aristocrats residing in palatial houses who will pay less than low-income parents of several children. Charges can sometimes be higher in poorer areas because of greater community costs.

Many Conservative Party members fear the tax and Thatcher's refusal to loosen her anti-inflation policy by lowering interests rates will thwart their chances of reelection in elections that must be held before mid-1992.

''There is a risk that we will be seen to have declared war on the people, and with the levels of community charge now being fixed, we risk being confronted by a massive and unchallengable campaign of civil disobedience '' warned Antony Marlow, who represents Northhampton North.

TOKYO (MARCH 2) UPI - Paced by an accelerated growth of imports, Japan's current account balance in January posted the first deficit in six years, the Finance Ministry announced Friday.

The ministry said in a preliminary report that the current account balance, covering both merchandise and service trade, showed a $636 million deficit a turnaround from the $3.82 billion surplus in December and that of $2.50 billion a year ago. The trade balance in January shrank sharply to $1.08 billion from $6.30 billion in December and $4.88 billion in January 1989, the ministry said.

"Improvement of the trade imbalance accelerated at a faster pace than expected and it is important to maintain this trend," said a ministry spokesman. The ministry's data showed that exports decreased 4.6 percent from a year ago to $18.16 billion while imports soared 20.8 percent to $17.08 billion.

The ministry announced last month that Japan's global merchandise trade surplus in January plummeted a near-record 89.5 percent from a year ago to $342.40 million, a dramatic drop from $3.25 billion a year ago.

The decrease was the ninth straight year-to-year drop and the sharpest since June 1979, when Japan's trade surplus plunged 89.8 percent. The ministry said Japan's favorable balance with the United States shrank 27.0 percent to $2.19 billion.

The balance of invisible trade such as tourism and banking produced a $1.48 billion deficit, compared with a $1.91 billion deficit in December and $2.20 billion a year ago.

The long-term capital balance posted a $2.87 billion deficit against a $3.39 billion surplus in December and a $4.58 billion deficit a year ago. The short-term capital balance was $1.67 billion in the red against a $5.24 billion surplus in December and a $2.45 billion surplus a year ago.

The overall balance of payments posted a $4.52 billion deficit in a turnaround from $7.35 billion in the black in December and $2.76 billion a year ago.

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (MARCH 2) UPI - Sandinista-controlled labor groups threatened to demand an immediate wage increase from President-elect Violeta Chamorro and government and opposition leaders held transition talks Friday.

The labor warning increased the pressure on Chamorro, who has raised expectations about her ability to reverse the nation's economic decline and is trying to wrest institutional power from the ruling Sandinistas, especially their control of the army, in transition talks.

Chamorro, in an interview aired Friday on ABC's ''Good Morning America'' program, said she believes the transition will be orderly.

''Yes, of course,'' Chamorrow said, adding that Ortega committed himself to the election three years ago under an agreement orchestrated by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias. ''He (Ortega) cannot go back because that would be betraying the presidents of Central America.''

''The elections were held, they were free and democratic. We won. He must little by little in the next two months gradually turn over all power to Violeta Barros de Chamorro,'' she said.

Chamorro was asked if the disarming of the Contra rebel force would be a problem, since the Sandinistas have demanded that before giving up control of the army and police. The Contras, however, have said they would stay in existence until Chamorro is inaugurated.

Chamorro said she would declare an amnesty upon her inauguration April 25, but indicated there was little she could do beforehand.

She said the contras ''have sent people to ask me what guarantees could I offer them and I told them that I had no authority, no power. How can I tell someone who is on a checklist as we say, if they can come back if they may be imprisoned or expelled from the country.''

While saying she planned to cut the Sandinista-controlled army and police to ''something small,'' she said some members could remain and that the Sandinista commanders ''are friends. Let's shake hands, embrace and find a way to work together.''

High-level government officials, including President Daniel Ortega's brother, Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, met Thursday with four representatives of the U.S.-backed opposition, said Ernesto Palacios, a spokesman for the National Opposition Union, or UNO, a coalition of 14 political parties that backed Chamorro.

The discussions are being held in several sites in Managua and include observers from the United Nations and the Organization of American States. Vice President-elect Virgilio Godoy said the talks dealt more with protocol than politics.

''They are negotiating the administrative rather than political aspects of the transition,'' Godoy said.

Nicaragua's influential Episcopal Conference joined in the call for the Sandinistas to turn over power to Chamorro.

''The current government must turn over each and every one of the powers that correspond to the new, democratically elected government,'' the clerics said. They also urged the U.S.-backed Contra rebels to disarm and to return to civilian life in Nicaragua.

The talks began Tuesday at the urging of former President Jimmy Carter after Chamorro's unexpected 55 percent to 41 percent victory over Ortega Sunday. Carter attended the first round of talks and returned to the United States Wednesday.

Some observers expect the Sandinistas to try to retain as much power as they can through their control of the 70,000-member Sandinista Popular Army, the police and some unions.

''(The Sandinistas) want to negotiate the transition but they will not succeed,'' said Luis Sanchez, a member of the UNO transition team. ''The transition will not be negotiated.''

Chamorro also has expressed her determination to take control of the country when she is inaugurated April 25 for a six-year term. ''I am the one who is going to be in charge from now on,'' she said Wednesday.

Ortega has warned the UNO not to try to roll back the 10-year-old revolution and said that the Sandinistas will ''rule from below'' as an opposition party with 38 of 90 seats in the National Assembly.

The threat to demand a wage increase followed Ortega's statement that the ruling Sandinista Front would relinquish the presidency but would continue to ''rule from below'' through the institutions it controls.

Radio Sandino, the official party station, said the Sandinistas will demand an immediate wage increase from Chamorro when she assumes office.

The Sandinista Workers Central, an umbrella labor group under control of the party, adopted a resolution Wednesday calling for strengthening labor alliances and demanding an ''immediate nationwide wage increase from the government of Violeta Chamorro,'' Radio Sandino said.

Newspapers quoted Lucio Jimenez, secretary-general of the CST, the acronym of the Sandinista labor group, as saying, ''President Ortega has said we should govern from below, and we are ready to govern.''

Independent economist Mario Arana said opposition to the Chamorro government by Sandinista unions could create political instability because it would make it more difficult for the UNO to meet expectations that it would resolve Nicaragua's economic problems.

''The UNO has raised tremendous expectations that it will create economic growth and stability, and I doubt very much it will be able to meet those expectations,'' Arana said Thursday. ''If not, there will be popular discontent and the (Sandinista) Front will lead the discontent. It could be an explosive situation.''

CHICAGO (MARCH 2) UPI - New rules for handling trading cards designed to make illegal trading more difficult are expected to be in place at the nation's commodity exchanges within three months following action by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

The CFTC Thursday approved final rules that will toughen the requirements for collecting the cards on the floors of the exchanges and reporting trades. The action stems from an FBI investigation of alleged fraudulent trading practices at the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Approximately 48 indictments have been made against traders of the two exchanges on charges that include front-running - the illegal practice of traders profiting from information obtained from customers by buying first for their own account. Some who have pleaded guilty to the charges filed against them but most are awaiting trial.

In May, federal agents with search warrants invaded the floors of four New York commodity exchanges, including the New York Mercantile Exchange and the Commodity Exchange, to issue scores of traders subpoenas for information related to a criminal investigation.

Last month industry sources close to the federal investigation said indictments were expected to be issued against a number of New York traders later this year, probably before the fall.

The new CFTC rules call for collecting trading records and time-stamping trading cards every 30 minutes rather than every hour as is now done, and using pre-printed, sequentially numbered trading cards.

The cards will differ for each exchange member and be distinguishable from cards used by other members. Traders also will be required to use non-erasable ink on the cards.

The CFTC said rules for collecting trading records and time-stamping existing trading cards will go into effect in about two months. Exchange members will be required to use the new pre-printed cards within three months. The CBOT and CME are cooperating in developing an electronic hand-held device that can be used on the trading floor and replace trading cards.

The exchanges will be exempt from complying with the new trading card rules if they demonstrate that the hand-held terminals or other automated devices have eliminated the alteration or fabrication of trading records.

BOGOTA, COLOMBIA (MARCH 2) UPI - Colombia's leftist party, the Patriotic Union, has called on former President Jimmy Carter to observe congressional elections scheduled for March 11 and the presidential contest in May.

Patriotic Union President Diego Montoya Cuellar told reporters Thursday that his party did not have ''guarantees'' in coming elections and called on an observer group headed by Carter to travel to Colombia for the polls.

Carter observed elections in Panama last year and most recently in Nicaragua last week.

The Patriotic Union, a leftist party formed by ex-guerrillas and communist politicians in the mid-1980s, has accused the government and military of mounting an ''extermination campaign'' on the left.

The Union says 73 of its members have been killed by right-wing death squads so far this year, while the government and security police say 11 Union members have been assassinated.

The government has answered the Union's charges of involvement in death squads by blaming a communist guerrilla group, currently on a nationwide offensive to sabotage the elections, for the killings.

The Union has sent letters to both the Medellin cartel and the guerrillas calling on them to either declare their guilt or provide any information they may have leading aurthorities to the culprits.

In the past five years, rightist death squads linked to drug traffickers and wealthy landowners have assassinated more than 900 members of the Patriotic Union.

TOKYO (MARCH 2) UPI - A government advisory panel proposed the breakup of Japan's domestic telecommunications giant Friday, provoking protests from the company.

The Telecommunications Council said it recommended division of Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp. to ensure fair competition and streamline the company's operations.

The recommendation, submitted to Posts and Telecommunications Minister Takashi Fukaya, said NTT's virtual monopoly on the domestic telecommunications market should be brought to an end and give its competitors a greater share in order to reactivate the market. The proposal called for division of NTT into three entities, intra-city, long-distance and mobile telephone services, by 1995.

NTT protested the plan, saying the breakup would cause an enormous economic and social effect and harm the interests of the company's 1.6 million shareholders. "The proposal gives an overemphasis to fair competition and neglects the demerits to be caused to the company's customers worldwide," a spokesman for the company said.

He said NTT's procurement from overseas suppliers was estimated at $357 million in fiscal 1989, ending March 31. The company also issued $1.5 billion worth of bonds on overseas market in 1988, he said.

The spokesman said the council made the proposal in a hasty manner without giving due consideration to major issues. "We are therefore opposed to the plan," he said. NTT, the former domestic telecommunications monopoly, was privatized in 1985 in line with the government's market deregulation policy.

The council's interim report in October, proposing the breakup of NTT, drew strong opposition not only from the company but also major economic organizations and corporate customers which depend on NTT's nationwide telecommunications network. The government is expected to make a decision on the recommendation by March 31.

ORANGE, N.J. (MARCH 2) UPI - New Jersey Nets forward Charles Shackleford, at the center of a point-shaving investigation at North Carolina State, was free on bail Friday after being charged with possession of a small amount of marijuana in New Jersey.

Shackleford was arrested Thursday night and freed after a friend posted $250 cash bail.

Orange police said an informant tipped them that marijuana was being transported in a 1989 Ford Thunderbird. Police said they found a stamp-size amount of marijuana in a plastic bag in Shackleford's coat pocket and placed him under arrest.

Shackleford is scheduled for arraignment Thursday before Municipal Court Judge Fred Pohill.

Because the amount of marijuana was so small, the charge against Shackleford is classified as a minor offense and usually results in a fine upon conviction, authorities said.

Shackleford is being treated for an infected elbow and did not travel with the Nets to their Friday night game in Chicago. The NBA drug policy contains no penalties for marijuana use.

''Our ownership is going to frown on a guy doing something like that at this level of play,'' Nets Coach Bill Fitch said. ''We don't condone someone smoking cigarettes, so naturally we don't condone this.''

Meanwhile, investigators will be looking at activities in 11 states before they turn their probe of alleged point-shaving by four N.C. State basketball players over to investigators next week, authorities said.

Investigators will meet with Morris County, N.J., prosecutors early next week to present evidence uncovered in the investigation, which apparently centers on point-shaving allegations about Shackleford in the 1987-88 season, said Howard Shaw, police chief in Denville, N.J.

Shackleford's lawyer and agent, Salvatore DiFazio, provided N.C. State officials with copies of two checks, saying the checks supported their contention that Shackleford had repaid $60,000 loaned to him while he was a Wolfpack player.

DiFazio asked N.C. State officials for copies of eight different game tapes from the 1987-88 season. The tapes sought were the Wolfpack's home and away games with Wake Forest, Duke, Clemson, Maryland and Clemson. DiFazio wanted the tapes because of allegations that Shackleford had shaved points during that season, the News and Observer of Raleigh reported Friday.

Shaw said the 11 states are California. Florida, Illinois, Massachusets, nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia.

He also said prosecutors would have to decide whether the case should be heard in New Jersey, North Carolina or federal courts.

Authorities have examined some telephone records that ''have a lot to do with'' the case, Shaw said. But he would not say whose telephone records they were.

The invesitgation by Shaw's department apparently has focused on Shackleford, who admitted this week he had accepted money from a man identified by ABC News as a gambler.

The network reported that Shackleford and three unnamed NCSU players had been paid to shave points in as many as four games that season. Shackleford allegedly distributed the money to the others.

The Denville man named by ABC News as having master-minded the point shaving scheme told the (Newark) Star-Ledger that the broadcast was full of ''innuendos'' and ''unsubstantiated allegations.''

''Their only value is as an inflammatory sourse of public speculations,'' Robert Kramer said in a statement prepared by his lawyer, Gerald Hanlon. He also denied that Angele Carvana, the man identified by ABC News as having master-minded the scheme, was a former business associate.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Eastern Airlines and its Texas Air Corp. parent have issued a statement rejecting conclusions about transactions between the two companies in the report by the examiner in the Eastern bankruptcy case.

David Shapiro, the court-appointed examiner, found in his report to the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York Thursday that 12 financial transactions between Eastern and Texas Air before the bankruptcy filing last March "provided Eastern with less than fair consideration or reasonably equivalent value." Texas Air has agreed to pay Eastern $280 million in compensation.

"Texas Air and Eastern Airlines categorically rejected any conclusion in the report issued by Shapiro that intercompany transactions between Eastern and its affiliates formed the basis for any material liability," the companies said in a statement issued late Thursday.

The statement said the examiner's report is "replete with faulty analyses, hearsay evidence, statements taken out of context, and misstatements of fact. It closely resembles allegations previously made by Eastern's unions. The unions actively participated in the preparation of the Shapiro report." Eastern filed for bankruptcy protection March 9, five days after its unions launched crippling strikes.

"Texas Air and Eastern, as well as their counsels and advisers, are uniformly prepared to prove that all aspects of the intercompany dealings investigated by the examiner were in the best interests of Eastern," the statement said.

The companies said its representatives reached an agreement late Wednesday with the examiner to resolve various issues. "The sole purpose of this arrangement was to provide Eastern with financial and marketing resources that would enable Eastern to rebuild its revenue structure," the statement said.

TUGUEGARAO, Philippines (MARCH 2) UPI - The Philippine military deployed troops in a northern town Friday in a bid to flush out a defiant provincial governor charged with rebellion for attempting to overthrow President Corazon Aquino.

Gov. Rodolfo Aguinaldo slipped from the Cagayan province capital of Tuguegarao Tuesday after an arrest warrant was issued by a judge in Manila for rebellion with murder in connection with the Dec. 1-9 coup attempt.

Agiunaldo, a former constabulary colonel, was reported by his lawyers to have taken refuge in the logging town of Gattaran and would fight efforts to arrest him with his private army of hill tribesmen and communist rebel returnees.

An army battalion of about 400 men was sent to Gattaran to augment local forces while military civil relations chief Brig. Gen. Oscar Florendo, who flew to Tuguegarao from Manila, appealed to Aguinaldo to surrender.

In Manila, a private television station reported that Aquinaldo has taken 12 soldiers, including a captain, as hostages and has set up roadblocks on all approaches to Gattaran.

Armed forces chief Gen. Renato de Villa Friday ordered the military to employ ''reasonable force'' to dismantle the barricades and arrest the fugitive governor.

He said the military was verifying reports that Aguinaldo has an armored vehicle with him.

''We don't want a bloody confrontation, but we have to implement the law '' Florendo said in a radio interview in Tuguegarao, 220 miles north of Manila.

Aguinaldo, who was suspended last month while he was undergoing investigation, sent word through his lawyers that he ''would not allow himself to be caught alive.''

Charged with Aguinaldo in the rebellion case was opposition Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, coup leader Gregorio Honasan, Senate military consultant Felix Brawner, former police major Billy Bibit and hotel owner Rebecco Panlilio and his wife, Estrella.

Enrile, a former defense minister who helped oust the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos four years ago, was arrested Tuesday in Manila and was detained at a Manila suburb police headquarters. Panlilio and his wife surrendered Thursday evening, police said and Bibit was captured in January.

Honasan and Brawner are at large.

At least 119 people were killed and more than 500 wounded in the December uprising, the sixth and worst in Aquino's four-year presidency.

HARTFORD, CT (MARCH 2) UPI - Former Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker Jr. said Friday he will run for governor as an independent, seeking to become the first person in modern state history to win the office without party backing.

Weicker, an outspoken liberal who was ousted from the Senate two years ago by Democrat Joseph Lieberman, said he decided to run as an independent to take his case ''to the streets of Connecticut.''

''I think I can read numbers as good as the next guy and I know where my strength lies. My strength lies on the streets of Connecticut,'' he told a packed Capitol news conference.

Although independent candidates have run for governor in the past, none has been elected since the advent of political parties. The office dates back to 1639, predating the emergence of the party system.

Weicker, the only Republican elected to statewide office since 1970, has been teaching at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., and serving as head of a Virginia foundation that promotes medical research since his ouster from the Senate.

He said he was launching the political comeback attempt as an independent with a goal of attracting support from Democrats and unaffiliated voters who have been crucial to his past victories.

''Both political parties in Washington and in Connecticut don't want to handle the tough answers and the tough problems because they're afraid of the heat it will generate on their parties. I'm willing to go ahead and take that kind of heat,'' Weicker said.

Weicker, who made a short-lived bid for the GOP presidential nomination in 1979, said the two major parties too often reach ''consensus'' on issues so they are not held accountable by voters on Election Day.

''Why am I back? Because I miss, very frankly, fighting for Connecticut,'' Weicker said. ''I'm running for an office with the trust of millions of people of this state, I'm not running to be head of a political party.''

Weicker adds a new note of uncertainty to a gubernatorial race where Republicans believe they have the best chance in years of winning the state's top office.

Democratic Gov. William A. O'Neill faces a challenge for his party's nomination from Rep. Bruce Morrison of Hamden. O'Neill's ratings in the polls have sunk to the lowest point since he became governor following record tax increases of nearly $1 billion that were enacted last year.

Weicker said he believed he could have won the Republican nomination in a September statewide primary, which would have been open to both Republican and unaffiliated voters.

Republican State Chairman Richard Foley Jr. said Weicker's decision to run as an independent would benefit the GOP candidates because he would siphon support from Democratic and unaffiliated voters.

''God bless him and let him run,'' Foley said. ''He's only the spoiler if you're Bill O'Neill. Most of all Lowell Weicker's votes are from the independent side of the aisle.''

Foley also downplayed the chances of a Weicker victory in November, saying the last major independent candidate on the Connecticut ballot was George Wallace, who won about 12 percent of the 1968 presidential vote.

Rep. John G. Rowland is considered the favorite for the GOP nomination in a field that also includes state Senate Minority Leader Reginald J. Smith of New Hartford, banker Joseph McGee of Fairfield and New Haven developer Joel Schiavone.

Until his 1988 loss to Lieberman, Weicker had never lost a political contest in a career that began with his election to the state House in 1962.

He was elected to the Senate in 1970 in a three-way race, ousting Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, who ran as an independent that year.

Weicker said this year's contest could be similar to the one that put him in the Senate. ''I think it's fair to say I came in here by virtue of a three-way race,'' he said.

Weicker said he will take an unpaid leave as head of the Research! America foundation in Alexandria, Va., effective May 1, when his teaching duties at George Washington University end.

He said he then plans to begin campainging full time in Connecticut, adding that he expected to spend between $1 million and $2 million on the campaign.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - China bought 140,000 metric tons of U.S. wheat at subsidized prices Friday, raising its total for purchases this week to nearly 300,000 tons, the Agriculture Department said.

The latest sale was worth about $20 million, based on Chicago prices.

China is the world's largest wheat importer and the No. 1 market for U.S. wheat exports. With the latest purchase, it has bought 6.01 million tons of American-grown wheat since the wheat trading year opend last June 1.

U.S. analysts have estimated Beijing will buy 14 million tons of foreign wheat during the 1989-1990 marketing year.

There are 36.7 bushels of wheat in a metric ton of 2,204.6 pounds, so the new sale equaled 5.13 million bushels and China's purchases of U.S. wheat for 1989-1990 total 220.56 million bushels.

The sales this week, which included 159,700 tons on Wednesday, were made under a new U.S. offer of up to 1 million tons of wheat at subsidized prices. The wheat was sold through the Export Enhancement Program, which gives exporters bonus amounts of government-owned grain if they lower their prices to make a sale.

In the new transaction, three exporters were given subsidies worth $5.60 a ton, or 15 cents a bushel.

China still has the opportunity to buy an additional 701,350 tons of wheat.

BOGOTA, COLOMBIA (MARCH 2) UPI - The Medellin cocaine cartel is preparing a new offensive on the nation by contracting with two British mercenaries who allegedly trained drug cartel death squads in the late 1980s, it was reported Friday.

The national newspaper El Tiempo, citing a security police file, also reported that cartel chief Pablo Escobar in January contacted hit men Henry Perez and Fidel Castano, alleged masterminds behind a series of anti-communist massacres in 1988 that killed hundreds of peasants.

A security police spokesman refused to comment on the report.

The El Tiempo account said the security police learned last week of the return to Colombia of Britons Brian David Tompkins and Peter MacAleese, both ex-commanders of the British SAS. The newspaper said the two could have been involved in the killings this week of a journalist, three peasant activists and six leftist leaders.

The Medellin cartel, cornered by police and militarily weakened by the massive government offensive unleashed last August, has been calling for peace talks with authorities and last week asked the government to form a special commission to arrange a final surrender.

The government has so far rejected all calls for negotiations, and last week declared the traffickers would have to hand themselves over directly to the authorities without a special commission.

A year ago, the security police seized video tapes of Israeli and British mercenaries training drug cartel hit squads under the direction of military kingpin Jose ''the Mexican'' Rodriguez Gacha, who was cut down by police last December in northern Colombia.

Authorities say these hit squads were used to cut down countless judges, journalists, policemen and government officials in recent years.

The government responded to a string of drug-related killings last August by unleashing an all-out offensive on the cartels and re-establishing extradition of wanted traffickers to the United States.

The drug lords answered by launching a bombing spree that claimed some 200 lives before Rodriguez Gacha was killed on Dec. 15 and the cartels started their peace campaign in January.

HOUSTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The president of Exxon Shipping Co., which owns and operates the Exxon Valdez, is resigning to become head of the American Bureau of Shipping and the ABS group of companies.

The Exxon Valdez is the tanker responsible for the largest oil spill in U.S. waters, and Exxon Shipping and its parent company have been indicted on federal charges in the oil spill off the Alaskan coast.

Frank J. Iarossi was elected to the new position at a special meeting of the ABS board of managers Monday. He first was approached with an offer of an executive position with ABS in July 1988, Iarossi said, but accepted the job now because the latest offer was to become chairman of the board and president.

ABS, founded in 1862, is one of the world's leading classification societies for ships and other offshore vessels, such as drilling rigs. As such, it establishes rules for the design and construction of those vessels and periodically surveys them to ensure standards are maintained.

''For someone with my background in marine technology, this represents the ultimate position I can hope to reach,'' Iarossi told The Houston Post in an interview published Friday. ''It's a very prestigious position.''

Iarossi is resigning as director and president of Exxon Shipping effective April 1 to become chairman an president of ABS in New Jersey. He will replace Richard T. Soper, who will retire.

Iarossi said his decision was not related to the Exxon Valdez oil spill. A spokesman for Exxon Shipping was not available for immediate comment on the matter.

''I'm looking forward,'' Iarossi said. ''I'm 52, so I have a lot of career ahead of me. This is an opportunity that I view with considerable excitement. But that doesn't mean I haven't been challenged in the last 11 months.''

Iarossi was the first top Exxon executive on the scene after the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Prince William Sound last March 24. He flew to Alaska from Houston that same day with the company's first response team to the spill that dumped 11 million gallons of oil into the water and polluted hundreds of miles of Alaska coast.

Joseph Hazelwood, captain of the Exxon Valdez, allegedly was drunk at the time of the mishap and currently is on trial on criminal charges.

ABS announced Iarossi's move Thursday, two days after a federal grand jury indicted the company on five criminal charges related to the spill.

Exxon executives did not comment on Iarossi's departure except to say his resignation was submitted ''on his own initiative.''

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (MARCH 2) UPI - Eastman Kodak Co. and the state Attorney General's Office are working out a deal that would end a criminal investigation of the company for violations of state environmental law, according to a published report Friday.

The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle quoted sources saying the two sides began negotiations on a plea bargain some two years ago after reports surfaced of chemical contamination at Kodak Park.

According to the sources, state Attorney General Robert Abrams and Thomas Jorling, of the state Department of Environmental Conservation, would travel to Rochester to make the announcement. No date has been set.

Kodak in December agreed to pay a record $1 million fine to settle civil charges brought by the state Department of Environmental Conservation. Sources said the photography giant also sought a settlement regarding the criminal charges, but talks broke down.

On Jan. 10 the state empaneled a special grand jury to investigate ''possible violations of state environmental law in Monroe County,'' a release from the attorney general said vaguely at the time.

The sources said that both sides appear to be near a plea-bargain settlement that would avoid protracted legal battles and a potentially greater liability for the company.

Neither side would confirm that a settlement was being pursued. But Kodak spokesman Ronald Roberts said ''it wouldn't be surprising to see that we would want to see a settlement that would put all this behind us.''

Under state environmental law, civil penalties can be assessed for unintentional violations. But criminal charges are brought only if it can be shown a company knowingly broke the law.

Kodak as surrendered about 80,000 documents to the investigations, and sources said at least one DEC official testified before the grand jury. There was no report on whether Kodak officials had been called to testify.

While no details concerning the criminal investigation have been released, sources said it focused in part on whether Kodak willfully failed to inform appropriate government agencies of chemical spills and leaks at Kodak Park.

DALLAS (MARCH 2) UPI - Ernst & Young said Friday it is studying a $560 million lawsuit filed by federal regulators accusing the accounting firm of failing to uncover massive losses at Western Savings Association in Dallas.

Mort Myerson, spokesman for the accounting firm in New York, said the firm may comment later on the lawsuit filed Thursday in a Dallas federal court in which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. sought $560 million in actual damages.

Western Savings failed in 1986 and was combined with seven other failed Texas thrifts in 1988 to become Sunbelt Savings of Dallas. The federal bailout of Western is expected to cost the government some $1 billion.

The outside audit of Western reportedly was done in 1984 and 1985 by Arthur Young & Co., which merged with Ernst & Whinney last year to become Ernst & Young.

The complaint said Arthur Young failed to assess the risks of irregularities, assigned personnel with inadequate training, relied unreasonably on the representations of Western Savings' management and failed to follow industry guides on conducting the audits.

The regulators said Arthur Young should have reported bogus profits from property sales, including property foreclosed by the thrift, and inadequate provisions for losses from loans and investments.

MOSCOW (MARCH 2) UPI - President Mikhail Gorbachev turned 59 Friday with some critics accusing him of allowing the Soviet Union to slide into anarchy and others charging that he seeks near dictatorial powers.

A group of admirers in the United States, organized by a retired U.S. naval officer, sent the Soviet leader a 59-foot-long birthday card signed by 2,000 Americans who are ''thankful for the changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.''

The Soviet leader, however, does not need more foreign fanfare. The challenge for this consensus Man of the 1980s everywhere but at home is to win the hearts of his own citizens.

Many Soviets acknowledge Gorbachev carries the weight of the world as he tries to undo an economic and cultural catastrophe wrought over more than five decades by his predecessors.

But few are willing to give him much credit for his performance nearly five years since he assumed power in March 1985.

Amid the course of discontent, several lawmakers recently offered rare words of compassion.

''I look at him with real sympathy,'' said Sergei Stankevich, one of the Parliament's brightest young stars who celebrated his 36th birthday Sunday.

''I do understand how tremendous his burden is,'' Stankevich said of Gorbachev. ''I have seen this burden close up. I've stood next to him and seen the dark circles under his eyes. I've seen him go a bit weak in the knees and lean on the table for support,'' Stankevich added.

''This burden is nearly unbearable for one man. He has already taken enormous risks. And now he will have to take on even more weight after five impossible years,'' he said.

But Gorbachev shows no signs of slowing down. He handles his massive responsibilities with the verve of a man half his age, hosting a stream of foreign leaders at the Kremlin and presiding over day after day of 12-hour sessions of the newly rambunctious Parliament.

''He is a very strong man,'' said Yuri Golik, a legislator from the Kuzbass coal region in western Siberia. ''Even physically he is very strong. He can meet with deputies from Russia and speak for four straight hours, then go to a Politburo meeting and talk for another three hours.''

Stankevich and Golik are hardly Gorbachev groupies. Stankevich is a leader of the Inter-Regional Deputies' Group that has sharply criticized Gorbachev for failing to take radical enough steps while Golik represents the militant Kuzbass coal miners who spearheaded a nationwide strike last summer.

But both men, and other politicians who see him close up, express admiration for Gorbachev.

''I'm not a very emotional man, but when I was near Gorbachev for the first time, I felt an enormous energy and magnetism,'' Golik said. ''Someone once said that to stand next to Lenin was to stand next to an engine. It's exactly the same with Gorbachev.''

Trying to explain Gorbachev's aura, Golik said: ''He commands respect by the force of his intellect. He goes up to the (parliamentary) tribune without notes and can broadly, intelligently and forcefully talk about the most complicated issues in great detail.''

Gorbachev's full persuasive powers were on display Tuesday when he convinced Parliament to approve a presidential system over the objections of lawmakers claiming the new post will vest too much power in his hands.

''Those who clamored for a presidency at the top of their lungs just three or four weeks ago now say the presidency will lead to a dictatorship - to the end of democracy and perestroika, to their burial,'' Gorbachev told the deputies.

''Only those who do not want to see a change for the better can argue for the postponement of solutions to major problems,'' he said.

Stankevich predicts that Gorbachev will give up his post as Communist Party general secretary by the end of the year.

Gorbachev will likely make the dramatic move, Stankevich says, once the strengthened presidency has gained final approval in two weeks by the Congress of People's Deputies, the Parliament's parent body, and after the 28th Party Congress in early summer when the Central Committee's remaining hard-liners will be removed.

''It's absolutely clear that if he wants to accelerate his reforms, he should drop his party post," Stankevich said. "I think he is quite ready to do this."

That master stroke may finally gain for Gorbachev the respect of his countrymen, who are still hesitant to join in the worldwide chorus of praise.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Amid White House opposition, a bipartisan congressional commission met Friday to vote on a $65 billion plan to provide all Americans with health insurance through a mixture of public and private coverage.

The 15-member Pepper Commission was established by Congress in 1988 to study two major health care issues - the up to 37 million Americans without health insurance and the 9 million requiring expensive long-term nursing home care.

The commission's work gained urgency after last year's repeal of Medicare catastrophic illness insurance as Congress looked to the panel to chart a new path for the nation's faltering and increasingly costly health care system.

In addition, President Bush instructed Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan to review the recommendations of the commission and two administration panels studying health care and to issue proposals for administration action.

The commission, made up of a dozen key health care players in Congress and three members appointed by President Ronald Reagan, met to vote on a draft proposal sponsored by its chairman, Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va.

The five-year plan would cost about $65 billion a year, drawing opposition from administration officials, including budget director Richard Darman, who have called panel members to express their sentiments.

The draft proposal would require employers to provide health insurance for their workers or contribute to a public insurance pool, congressional sources said. Small businesses, which have vigorously opposed mandated coverage in the past, would receive subsidies to help ease their costs.

The proposal reportedly also would provide federal coverage for the first three months of nursing home care and for home health care for the disabled, restructure Medicaid, make premiums for nursing home care tax deductible, try to contain costs and require changes in insurance industry practices.

Rockefeller had hoped to obtain unanimous backing for a commission report as a way of focusing debate on the issue of health care, which he has called ''a potential nation breaker ... the kind of thing that can savage our country.''

However, many in Congress doubt whether comprehensive health care legislation is possible following the furor over the catastrophic insurance program, which was repealed because senior citizens did not want to pay for it.

The United States spends more than 11 percent of its annual gross national product on health care, more than any industrial country, and the cost of health benefits increasingly has been a factor in strikes nationwide.

SELMA, AL (MARCH 2) UPI - Civil rights activists gathered Friday for a

''March for Racial Justice in Education'' as this racially-divided town prepared to commemorate ''Bloody Sunday.''

The demonstration begins the commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the Selma-to-Montgomery march, which spured passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

On Sunday, marchers will cross the Edmund Pettus Bridge, where state troopers and a mounted local posse attacked voting-rights marchers with tear gas, billy clubs, bull whips and cattle prods on a day that became known as ''Bloody Sunday.''

Black leaders scheduled to speak at local churches Sunday include the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga. Lewis, who will lead the re-enacted event Sunday, was severely injured on the aborted march on March 7, 1965.

A quarter of a century later, despite considerable racial progress, turmoil and tension still afflict Selma, 50 miles west of Montgomery, the state capital.

The Rev. Benjamin Chavis Jr., director of the Commission for Racial Justice of the United Church of Christ, accused city officials of practicing ''an American form of apartheid.''

Chavis is one of thousands from througout the nation here to commemorate Selma's important role in the civil rights struggle. Some of them will participate in the weeklong march to Montgomery, which starts Sunday.

''We've had demonstrations before to dramatize the right to vote,'' said Chavis, spokesman for his 1.6 million denomination. ''Now we're dramatizing the right to education.''

Civil rights activists contend that Selma's white-controlled Board of Education's refusal to extend the contract of Norward Roussell, the city's first black school superintendent, was racially based.

Selma is not unlike many towns throughout the Deep South. Blacks now vote and hold public office but much of the town's economic power and social order have not changed.

Although blacks slightly outnumber whites in Selma, there are only four blacks on the nine-member City Council and only five of the 11 appointed members of the school board are black. Mayor Joe Smitherman, who held power in 1965, remains in office.

The school board's decision to terminate Roussell in February sparked demonstrations by blacks that forced the city to close its school system for almost a week last month. The board agreed to reinstate Roussell, but did not extend his contract, which expires in June.

Schools were reopened after blacks agreed not to conduct any more protests on school grounds, but the fear of possible violence has prompted more than 300 students, most of them white, to leave the public school system in the past two weeks. Most of the students have enrolled in one of the two all-white private academies in Selma.

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM (MARCH 2) UPI - Czechoslovakia's foreign minister ironed out details Friday of a trade agreement with the European Community and said his country seeks full membership in the 12-nation trading bloc as quickly as possible.

''I think all of us should be members of the European Community,'' Czechoslovakian Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier said when asked about the trade agreement, similar to previous EC pacts with Poland and Hungary.

The EC Council of Ministers is expected to approve the trade and economic cooperation agreement with Czechoslovakia when it meets next Monday.

Czechoslovakia and the European Community would then begin talks on a ''second generation'' association agreement that envisions closer economic ties and even political discussions.

On the eve of his first visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels, Dienstbier also addressed the thorny issue of a united Germany's relationship to the Western military alliance.

He told a news conference at the EC headquarters that a compromise proposal to keep a united Germany within NATO, but bar alliance troops from the present territory of East Germany are ''artificial.''

Dienstbier's comments reflected a growing feeling in Europe that the proposed compromise for a united Germany's NATO role, at first hailed for its simplicity, is fraught with difficulties and represents only a temporary solution. The United States supports the compromise but the Soviets seek a neutral German state.

At the news conference, Dienstbier stated his government's desire for full membership in the European Community.

''Czechoslovakia would like to re-enter Europe as quickly as possible,'' said a deputy foreign minister. ''All these steps are just prerequisites for attaining this final goal.''

Association agreements were once seen as a step to full EC status but EC officials now stress that ''association'' no longer guarantees automatic membership.

The talks between Dienstbier and Frans Andriesssen, vice president of the EC's executive Commission, also focused on the Eastern European economic aid plan launched last year by 24 Western nations, which is coordinated by the Commission.

Poland and Hungary have chiefly benefited from food aid under the program but Czechoslovakia seeks help with education, vocational training, environmental protection and economic restructuring.

Expansion of the ''Group of 24'' program requires a decision at the ministerial level, probably in June, involving Secretary of State James Baker and other officials, but the EC seeks to lay the groundwork now.

An EC fact-finding team travels to Czechoslovakia next week and planning work is beginning because ''we would like to lose as little time as possible,'' an EC spokesman said.

The Czech foreign minister brought a letter from Czech President Vaclav Havel to EC Commission President Jacques Delors, requesting EC assistance in education including a university exchange program.

''We count on education to play a key role in the ending of division in our continent at the time of achievement of a vision of a united Europe,'' said the playwright turned president.

CAIRO, EGYPT (MARCH 2) UPI - Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak has postponed his first visit to Moscow but denied any rift with the Kremlin over Soviet Jewish migration to Israel, the Foreign Ministry said Friday.

A Soviet Embassy spokesman also confirmed the visit was postponed and that no new date had been fixed.

Diplomats said Moscow asked Mubarak to cancel his visit after repeated criticism from Egypt over Soviet migration policy.

Government-supervised Cairo newspapers said Mubarak had been scheduled to go to Moscow March 19 in what would have been the first visit by an Egyptian leader first to the Soviet Union since the late President Anwar Sadat expelled some 17,000 Soviet advisers in 1972.

Since signing a peace treaty with Israel in 1981, Egypt has received most of its aid from the West, especially the United States. But it still owes Moscow some $3 billion in overdue military debts and relies on the Soviet Union for spare parts for Soviet-made military and industrial equipment.

''President Mubarak will not be visiting Moscow in mid-March,'' an Egyptian Foreign Ministry spokesman said, adding that both Mubarak and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev would be concentrating on domestic issues at that time.

''We are discussing a new date for the visit,'' he said.

The spokesman denied the visit had been postponed because of growing concern in many Arab states over the continuing migration of Soviet Jews to Israel.

Egyptian government officials earlier said the flood of Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel would top the agenda of talks between Mubarak and Gorbachev.

Arab states, including Egypt, have called for a halt to the migration, for fear it might upset the sensitive demographic balance between Jews and the Palestinians who live in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the River Jordan and the Gaza Strip.

Arabs also fear the Soviet influx might hinder Palestinian efforts to create an independent state in the occupied territories.

But Israel, which expects some 100,000 Soviet Jews to arrive this year and as many as 800,000 over the next five to six years, says only 1 percent of Soviet immigrants have so far opted to settle in the occupied territories and that the government has not directed them there.

''The issue of Soviet Jewish migration is not the reason for the postponement of President Mubarak's visit to Moscow,'' the Foreign Ministry spokesman said. ''Egypt has expressed its serious concern over the matter, but there is no rift in ties.''

Soviet Ambassador to Cairo Gennady Zhuravlev dismissed Arab fears that Moscow was abandoning the Palestinian cause.

A Kuwaiti newspaper quoted unnamed Soviet officials as warning Arab states to drop their ''hysterical campaign against Moscow'' over Soviet migration policies.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli Vorontsov said his country would not reverse its decision allowing any Soviet citizen wishing to leave the country from doing so.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The Internal Revenue Service will review a tax court's decision ending a 7-year fight over the estate of publisher Samuel Newhouse before deciding whether to appeal, a spokesman said Friday.

The IRS had sought $609.5 million from the estate in one of the biggest tax disputes in American history. The newspaper and broadcasting magnate died in August 1979.

But Judge John Williams, in a ruling dated Feb. 28, agreed with the Newhouse family's valuation of the late publisher's holdings in Advance Publications Inc. and Newhouse Broadcasting Co., overturning the IRS claim.

Steve Pyrek, a spokesman for the IRS, said ''it's much too early to say,'' whether the government will appeal ths decision.

''Right now we're in that period of sitting down and going over it with the other side,'' Pyrek said.

The Newhouse family owns 26 newspapers and the New Yorker magazine through Advance Publications, while Newhouse Broadcasting owns cable television systems that serve more than 1 million people.

In addition, Advance Publications owns Conde Nast Publications, which publishes Glamour, GQ, Vogue, Mademoiselle and Brides as well as other periodicals.

Among the biggest Newhouse newspaper properties are The Star-Ledger in Newark, N.J., The Times-Picayune in New Orleans, The Plain Dealer in Cleveland, and the Advance in Staten Island, N.Y.

In the prolonged legal battle, the IRS sought $609.5 million from Advance Publications and Newhouse Broadcasting, cotending the late publisher's holdings in the two companies totaled more than $1.3 billion.

But the family contended that his holdings were worth $176 million in Advance Publications in 1979, the year he died, and worth nearly $60 million in the cable concern.

The main point in the case was the fair value of Newhouse's holdings, with the IRS contending it should be based on the sale price each newspaper and magazine property would bring.

The family, however, contended the stock was worth less because the late publisher was not the only shareholder and could not make such a sale without the approval of the others.

BANGKOK, THAILAND (MARCH 2) UPI - Thai Prime Minister Chatichai Choonhavan has yielded to labor union demands that he postpone privatization of parts of key state enterprises, a move intended to improve efficiency and provide desperately needed cash, officials said Friday.

The postponement averted threatened strikes and work actions that could have crippled ports, power plants, railways and telecommunications. But it left the government with the problem of how to pay for massive infrastructure projects.

Chatichai said the government was forced to cave in to union demands because of what he called the ''weakness of the democratic system'' in Thailand.

''I may be the last prime minister in our democractic system,'' said Chatichai, obviously disheartened by his concession.

Sources close to the prime minister said he feared rejection of the union demands would bring strikes and unrest, opening the door for the powerful military to step in and take control.

The government reversal followed weeks of labor agitation, including a strike that closed down the country's main port for two days and mass rallies of workers at the Electricity Generating Authority of Thailand, or EGAT.

The port strike was halted only after army commander-in-chief Gen. Chavalit Yongchaiyudh mediated the dispute. Chavalit is widely believed to be ready to retire from the army in the next few months to seek the premiership, an ambition the general has denied.

Chatichai said he had not canceled privatization plans, but had been forced to allow labor union representatives to have a major voice on a committee to deal with state enterprises.

''From now on, any proposal related to state enterprise matters will have to be channeled through this committee,'' Chatichai said.

Ekachai Ekhankamol, secretary-general of the State Enterprises Relations Group, which comprises 25 state enterprise unions, said he was satisfied with the government plan, but warned that agitation would be renewed if the government tried to back out of the agreement.

''This means that if the government tries to bring the private sector into any state enterprise, it will have to be cleared first through this committee,'' Ekachai said in an interview with United Press International.

The new arrangement could have serious long-term effects on the Thai economy.

''If we stop privatization, we stop Thailand, or at least slow it down,'' said a senior government economist.

He said privatization was expected to provide a key source of funds for more than $12 billion in expansion of public infrastructure over the next three years.

''There simply is not enough budget and not enough public savings to foot the bill,'' he said.

TRENTON, NJ (MARCH 2) UPI - Republican Rep. Jim Courter, dealt a harsh political blow in losing a bid for governor of New Jersey last year, plans to announce Friday he will not seek an eighth term in Congress, a spokesman said.

Courter, 48, planned to make the announcement at an afternoon news conference in Morristown, spokesman Kevin Kirk said.

Kirk said he did not know why Courter had decided not to seek re-election to the 12th District seat he had held since 1978.

Courter ran for governor last fall against Rep. Jim Florio, D-N.J., but lost by about 500,000 votes out of about 2.1 million cast. A major issue in the campaign was Courter's long record of opposition to abortion. Florio is a supporter of legal abortion.

Courter had been expected to be challenged for the House seat by Democrat Marguerite Chandler, a Somerville businesswoman who supports abortion. It was not immediately clear which Republicans might come forward.

Florio declined immediate comment on Courter's pending announcement.

Courter, a member of the House Armed Services Committee and the Select Committee on Aging, is an attorney.

Several senior House members have announced they will not seek re-election this fall. Under a clause in the congressional ethics law, House members who took office before January 1980 and leave office this term can convert leftover campaign funds to personal use.

A report by the group Common Cause in November said that Courter, who qualifies under the grandfather clause, had just $624 in his campaign account as of June 30, 1989.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - Former federal judge Arlin Adams of Philadelphia was named special prosecutor Friday to investigate former Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce, who is implicated in a housing department scandal that may cost taxpayers $4 billion.

A panel of federal judges named Adams to the job after Attorney General Dick Thornburgh requested a special prosecutor for the case following a preliminary Justice Department investigation.

Adams will have the authority to investigate allegations of criminal conduct at the Department of Housing and Urban Development during the Reagan administration.

Pierce, who came to be known as ''Silent Sam'' for the way he avoided the limelight during Ronald Reagan's eight years as president, has been implicated in allegations that he and other HUD officials engaged in conspiracy to defraud the government in the selection process for low cost housing grants.

Much of the money for subsidized housing went to politically connected Republicans or developers represented by high-powered GOP consultants with ties to the Reagan administration.

President Bush's housing secretary, Jack Kemp, estimates the HUD scandal will cost taxpayers between $2 billion and $4 billion.

The scandal involved influence-peddling, fraud, waste, abuse, poor management and outright theft of HUD money. Developers paid millions of dollars to politically powerful consultants - most of them Republicans - to secure scare federal housing rehabilitation money.

James Watt, the controversial former head of the Interior Department, was one of the consultants. He earned more than $100,000 for making one telephone call to Pierce on behalf of a developer.

Although Pierce was a member of Reagan's Cabinet for eight years, Reagan once did not recognize him at a White House reception and referred to him as ''Mayor Pierce.'' Pierce was the only black member of the Reagan Cabinet.

In appointing the special prosecutor, the special court panel limited the scope of Adams' authority to areas specified by Thornburgh - conspiracy to defraud the government.

But members of the House Judiciary Committee who sparked the Justice Department's initial inquiry said Thornburgh should not have excluded perjury allegations from the investigation.

Thornburgh argued there was insufficient evidence of perjury stemming from Pierce's testimony before Congress. After appearing initially and giving some testimony, Pierce hired a lawyer and then invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

''Judge Adams brings to this investigation the judgment, experience and ability acquired by many years of service as a federal circuit judge, as a private practitioner and as a recognized leader of the courts and the bar of the nation,'' said the panel of three federal judges in ordering the appointment.

Adams was given authority to investigate the activities of Pierce and other HUD officials from 1984 to 1988 and prosecute ''all offenders,'' the special court panel said.

Robert Plotkin, a lawyer for Pierce, said: ''We are pleased that the independent counsel has finally been identified and that the investigation can get under way. We have every reason to expect that Judge Adams will conduct a fair and impartial investigation.''

Adams was appointed in 1969 to the U.S. Circuit Court for the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals, with jurisdiction in Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey and the Virgin Islands. He served for 17 years.

''During his service on the Court of Appeals he was widely recognized as one of the outstanding judges of the nation,'' the appeals court judges said.

Adams currently is chairman of the board of trustees of the University of Pennsylvania Law School.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - U.S. and Soviet officials have made a detailed review of a U.S. proposal and should settle down to the task of drafting a trade agreement in meetings later this month, deputy trade ambassador Julius Katz said Friday.

The trade agreement would allow the United States to offer "most favored nation" trade status to the Soviet Union. Officials want to have the trade agreement ready for signature at a superpower summit in June.

"I think we're precisely on target" to meet the deadline, Katz said in a telephone news conference from London, where the second round of U.S.-Soviet discussions was concluding.

A difference in viewpoint remains, Katz said. The Soviet Union prefers a generally worded document devoted to a granting of most favored nation status while the United States wants details "to assure a better balance, or more of a balance, of commercial opportunity," he said. The two sides were scheduled to meet the week of March 19 in Vienna. The United States presented its text to Soviet officials a week ago.

"We ... had very detailed discussions," Katz said. "We need to go back and reflect and they do too. Then when we meet in Vienna, my expectation is we'll actually start drafting that. "I don't know far we'll get in that week. We're also doing (grain agreement) talks that week.

Katz said he still hoped to conclude the trade agreement negotiations in April, or by early May at the latest. He said no "insuperable" obstacles have emerged.

The Jackson-Vanik law bars trade concessions to the Soviet Union unless the Kremlin reforms its emigration policies. Soviet leaders have indicated a new emigration law would be adopted this spring.

TIMISOARA, ROMANIA (MARCH 2) UPI - Twenty-one top officers of the Romanian secret police, their heads shaved, appeared in court Friday to face charges in the Dec. 17 massacre of anti-government protesters and the destruction of their corpses.

The biggest trial of so-called ''war criminals'' of Romania's pro-democracy uprising was broadcast on televison live from Timisoara, the site of the massacre, and is expected to last several weeks.

It comes amid growing public pressure on the new government to publicly identify Securitate members and to punish those who committed human rights crimes.

The defendants looked as though they stepped out of a Nazi concentration camp, with their shaved heads and wearing blue-and-white prison pajamas.

Appearing tired and dejected, they sat with heads bowed for 1 1/2 hours while a judge read the charges against them.

The 21 officers formed the command of the Timis County branch of the Securitate, the security force that enforced Ceausescu's repressive policies.

A 22nd defendant, a deputy commander of the county inspectorate, is reported to have hanged himself in jail two weeks ago.

The defendants are charged with ordering security forces to fire on protesters in the city of Timisoara Dec. 17 and destroying the evidence of the massacre. Prosecutors allege the officers had 40 corpses smuggled to the capital to be incinerated and the ashes dumped in a sewer.

Timisoara was the site of the opening battles of the uprising. The dictator was captured Dec. 22 and executed with his wife, Elena, on Christmas Day.

In a related development, the military judge who sentenced Ceausescu to death was found shot and killed in his office in what officials said Friday was an apparent suicide. Maj. Gen. Gica Popa, 57, took his life after suffering a ''severe nervous breakdown,'' Justice Minister Teofil Pop said.

Crowds gathered early Friday outside the House of Youth building where the military tribunal was held. The building was guarded by scores of armed troops and several amrored vehicles and packed with about 200 spectators and journalists from around the world.

The prisoners were crammed into four rows of a specially built dock constructed in tiers and flanked by armed guards.

One of three judges presiding over the trial read an indictment that described how security officers allegedly loaded 40 corpses, wrapped in plastic, in a truck at a Timisoara mortuary and hauled them to Bucharest's Ash Cemetery before dawn on Dec. 18. There the corpses were thrown into an incinerator and the ashes later tossed into a sewer, the document said.

The judge said the officers were following the orders of Maj. Gen. Emil Macri, the former head of intelligence in Timis County and one of the 21 defendants on trial.

After the charges were read the trial was recessed until Saturday.

Besides Macri, some of the other top Securitate officers facing trial are Col. Ion Popescu, head of the county branch of the Interior Ministry inspectorate, Col. Traian Sima, commander of the Securitate troops in Timis, and Col. Ioan Deheleanu, county militia leader.

Thousands of its residents took to the streets of Timisoara on Dec. 17 to protest government persecution of Rev. Laszlo Tokes, a Calvanist pastor and Hungarian nationalist. The bloody crackdown that followed sparked the nationwide rebellion that toppled Ceausescu and led to his execution by firing squad.

At least 80 people were killed in Timisoara alone, and at least 150 others are reported missing. The new government has dismissed initial reports that as many as 3,000 demonstrators were killed in the crackdown.

A transcript of Ceausescu's last meeting with his ruling Politburo showed the dictator was directly responsible for the order to open fire on demonstrators.

''I want a decree drawn up immediately that these hooligans must be killed ... and that the army must have guns and ammunition,'' the transcript quotes Ceausescu as saying.

In a related development, the official Rompres news agency said Ceausescu's brother, Nicolae Andruta Ceausescu, has been ordered to appear before the Romanian Supreme Court in Bucharest to face a charge of instigating genocide.

He is accused of firing 30 times into a crowd with a pistol, killing seven people, during a demonstration Dec. 21.

The date of his trial was not announced but it was believed he would be tried jointly with Ceausescu's son, Nicu, who faces similar charges.

JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA (MARCH 2) UPI - The first two African National Congress activists to return legally from exile to South Africa received a rapturous welcome Friday from anti-apartheid organizations and supporters of all races.

About 300 people, mainly women, dressed in the black, green and gold of the ANC, danced and sang in greeting as Ray Alexander, 76, and her husband Jack Simons, 83, appeared and raised clenched fists.

''This is a great and joyous occasion after 25 years of exile,'' Alexander said. ''We must see to it that the breakthrough in South Africa is widened and our people take over power in a peaceful and orderly manner.''

''The real revolution is about to begin,'' said the frail Simons standing on a bench outside the airport terminal propped up by young anti-apartheid stalwarts.

In a statement the two white activists, who also are members of the South African Communist Party, praised President Frederik de Klerk's lifting of bans on anti-apartheid organizations, including the ANC and SACP, as ''a courageous act that heralds a new era in the history of our country.''

Albertina Sisulu, wife of ANC leader Walter Sisulu, released last year after 26 years in prison, and Patrick ''Terror'' Lekota, publicity secretary of the anti-apartheid umbrella United Democratic Front, flung their arms around the pair and escorted them through the jostling crowd.

Alexander was an active trade unionist from the 1930s and subsequently represented black South Africans in the country's whites-only Parliament. She also was a founder of the Federation of South African Women.

In 1953, she was served with a restriction order effectively excluding her from Parliament. The government action provoked widespread strikes by black workers.

When Simons, an academic at the University of Cape Town in the field of African government, also was restricted in 1965, the couple went into exile. They first lived in Britain before moving in 1967 to the Zambian capital of Lusaka where the ANC has its headquarters.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Rates for 30-year fixed mortgages fell by 0.08 percentage points this week while adjustable-rate mortgages increased by 0.04 percentage points, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. said Friday.

The agency, which buys mortgages from lenders and packages them as securities for sale to investors, said interest on fixed-rate loans fell to 10.23 percent this week from 10.31 percent the week before.

Adjustable-rate mortgages averaged 8.48 percent, up from 8.44 percent last week, the agency said.

The fixed-rate average is for a 30-year loan covering 80 percent of a home's cost. The average adjustable-rate mortgage also is for 30 years, but for 75 percent of the home price.

GENEVA (MARCH 2) UPI - The number of AIDS cases reported worldwide rose by 3.53 percent in February to a known total of 222,740, the World Health Organization said Friday.

The WHO said the United States, with 121,645 cases, or 54.6 percent of the world total, accounted for 3,864 of February's new cases, almost half of the 7,596 reported during the month.

WHO figures date back to 1980. The organization said at least half of the known cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome have so far resulted in death.

The U.N. health agency's special AIDS division also reiterated that actual cases are estimated at two to three times the known total. The discrepancy is caused by poor and late reporting by many African and other developing countries, the division said.

Uganda and Kenya, with the fourth- and fifth-highest number of reported cases worldwide, last reported to the WHO in April and June of 1989, respectively, making their figures outdated.

The most affected countries as of Feb. 28, with the date of their last report were:

1. United States - 121,645 (Jan. 31, 1990); 2. Brazil - 9,555 (Dec. 30, 1989); 3. France - 8,883 (Dec. 31, 1989); 4. Uganda - 7,375 (April 15, 1989); 5. Kenya - 6,004 (June 30, 1989); 6. Tanzania - 5,627 (Dec. 31, 1989); 7. Italy - 5,307 (Dec. 31, 1989); 8. Zaire - 4,636 (Dec. 31, 1988); 9. Spain - 4,633 (Dec. 31, 1989); and 10. West Germany - 4,433 (Jan. 31, 1990).

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Major congressional proposals to improve the teaching profession are either unnecessary or duplicate programs already begun by the Bush administration, a top education official told a Senate panel Friday.

The legislation backed by key Senate Democrats would ''authorize a host of already tried, retread programs that offer no coherent vision of how we might address the very important issue of the professional development of teachers,'' said Dr. Leonard Haynes, assistant secretary for postsecondary education.

Haynes singled out two bills, introduced by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., both aimed at improving recruitment, training and retention of the nation's teachers through a series of programs and incentives.

Haynes told a subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Human Rescources Committee, chaired by Pell, the administration opposes both measures ''because they either address problems we do not agree exist, or they fail to recognize the extensive and pervasive federal efforts already in place.''

''I'm disappointed and sorry to see the administration take such a strong position against these bills. I'd hoped we would be able to work with the 'education president,''' Pell said, referring to the name Bush promoted during his presidential campaign.

''There does not seem to be the willingness'' on the part of the administration, Pell said, ''to sit down and work together.''

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said he found Haynes' testimony to be ''a totally unsatisfactory statement.

''We have a problem in attracting good teachers and we shouldn't pretend that we don't have these problems,'' Simon said.

''Your words, 'no coherent vision,''' Simon told Haynes, ''... describe where we are right now in American education.''

''If the administration isn't willing to come in and say, 'These are constructive alternatives,' then I think the Congress is just going to have to grab the ball and run with it,'' Simon said.

''Every American has a view on education,'' Haynes replied. ''That's probably part of the problem we have. There's no one right answer.''

Haynes said the Department of Education particularly disagrees with the premise in both bills that the nation is facing a teacher shortage.

While agreeing that there are problems with minority recruitment, an issue addressed in the proposed legislation, Haynes said, ''There is no evidence of an overall teacher shortage now, nor does it appear that there will likely be in the future.''

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said that even though she agreed with some of the administration's criticisms, she has agreed to co-sponsor the Senate bills because they set up programs to attract ''the best and the brightest'' into the teaching profession.

''What troubles me is that there seems to be a real shortage of qualified students going into teaching,'' she said.

(MARCH 2) UPI - TODAY'S PEOPLE:

SPIKE SPEAKS: Spike Lee says acting is his least favorite part of the movie-making process and he appears in his movies mostly to satisfy the money people. ''It's easier to get my films out if I'm in them. Hollywood likes my face on movie posters,'' Lee said in a lecture at Brown University in Providence, R.I. ''I really don't like acting that much. I like the editing part best. And the shooting part is hell.'' Although his movies take frank looks at race relations, Lee says people shouldn't expect too much from them. ''I don't have the answers to lead black people out of the woods. I'm not a savior,'' he said. ''People come to hear me and they think I'm going to say something that's going to change their life around. I'm a mere filmmaker making films.'' Lee's next movie, ''Mo' Better Blues'' with Denzel Washington, will be released later this year and he's also planning one titled ''Jungle Fever'' about interracial marriage and a documentary about Georgetown University basketball Coach John Thompson.

LITTLE HELP FROM HIS FRIENDS: There were some surprise attractions at Thursday night's sold-out performance by Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers at the Forum in Los Angeles. First, Bob Dylan came out and joined the band on his ''Rainy Day Women.'' Next, Bruce Springsteen walked out to help on ''I'm Cryin''' and Creedence Clearwater's ''Travelin' Band.'' The backstage crowd included Jeff Lynne, Petty's bandmate in the Traveling Wilburys, Dave Stewart of Eurhythmics, ex-Byrd Roger McGuinn and Slash and Duff MacKagan of Guns 'n' Roses.

TED AND LEE: Ted Koppel wouldn't give in to Lee Iacocca's demands so the Chrysler Corp. chairman was left off the Wednesday night brodacast of ''Nightline.'' ABC had been promoting the ''Nightline'' all night by saying Iacocca would be on the show, which featured officials from Honda and Toyota talking about the merits of American and Japanese cars. But Iacocca wanted to be live on the set with Koppel instead of at a remote location. ''We sometimes do allow guests on the set with Koppel but not when we are interviewing other guests from remote locations,'' said David Tabacoff, senior producer of the show. ''It would give the guest in the studio an unfair advantage.''

MICK MISSES JERRY: Jerry Hall made her London stage debut this week in a revival of ''Bus Stop,'' playing singer Cherie, the role Marilyn Monroe made famous in the 1956 movie version of the William Inge play. Hall's boyfriend, Mick Jagger, didn't make the show because he's touring Japan with the Rolling Stones but Jade Jagger, the singer's daughter from his marriage to Bianca Jagger, was on hand. Hall also played the Cherie role in a New Jersey theater and Jagger caught her act there.

ARTISTIC AWARDS: Playwright Arthur Miller, author of ''Death of a Salesman'' and other American theater classics, has been chosen to receive the 1990 Sarah Josepha Hale Medal in a Sept. 29 ceremony in Newport, N.H. The award is named for Newport native Sarah Josepha Hale, a 19th century author, editor, social reformer and feminist ... Kirk Douglas has a big weekend scheduled in Paris. He will receive the French Legion of Honor on Sunday from Culture Minister Jack Lang and then will preside over the announcement of the prestigious French Cesar movie awards. The French made Douglas a Commandeur of Arts and Letters in 1978.

BARI, ITALY (MARCH 2) UPI - Twenty-nine Asian refugees stranded aboard a Greek ferry for more than a week were allowed to disembark Friday by Italian immigration authorities pending further investigation of their case.

The 29 still aboard the ferry Europa II Friday morning were transferred to a city refugee hostel on the orders of Deputy State Attorney Nicola Magrone.

At the hostel, they joined 23 others transferred from the ship Thursday. Two other Asians from the ship were undergoing treatment in a city hospital for the effects of a hunger strike the 54 Asians started aboard the Europa II Monday.

Friday's evacuation of the ferry boat was hastened after one of the Asians jumped from a deck into the harbor. He was rescued by a police launch and taken to the Bari Polyclinic, which released him after treatment and took him to the refugee hostel.

The 54 refugees from Pakistan, India, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh said they paid $2,000 each to international racketeers on the promise of getting lodging and jobs in Italy.

But when the Europa II docked in Bari Feb. 21, Italian authorities sent them back to the Greek port of Patras, where they had boarded the ferry. Greek immigration officials returned them to Bari on Sunday.

On Thursday, the Greek government informed Italian authorities they would be prepared to let the Asians into Greece. But in the meantime, a woman representative of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees arrived in Bari.

She told Magrone, the Bari magistrate in charge of the case, that under U.N. regulations and a new Italian law governing the handling of immigrants from outside the European Community, the Asians had a legal right to request juridical status as refugees.

On this basis, Magrone ordered the transfer of the Asians - 48 men and six women - to the Bari hostel pending a full examination of their case.

After his ship was evacuated, the skipper of the Europa II sailed for Patras shortly after 2 p.m. with the permission of Bari port authorities.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - A House panel concluded Friday that the Navy failed to prove its claim gunner's mate Clayton Hartwig most likely caused the ''wrongful, intentional'' explosion in one of the USS Iowa's 16-inch guns that killed 47 sailors last April.

Hartwig and 46 shipmates died in the explosion that was graphically recorded on video tape from outside the No. 2 gun turret. Protests from his family led to congressional hearings and the report from the investigations subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee.

''By the standards of the U.S. justice system, the subcommittee does not believe that Clayton Hartwig could be convicted of any crime. By the more subjective standards of history, there will always be a case to be made against him.

''By the standards of this subcommittee - and the standards we think should have been applied in the Navy's investigation - there is only a hypothesis, and a tenuous one at that,'' the panel's report said.

Rep. Nick Mavroules, D-Mass., the subcommittee's chairman, said, ''After careful review of the Navy's investigation, I honestly believe that the Navy failed to substantiate beyond reasonable doubt its conclusions that ... Hartwig generated the tragic explosion.''

Hartwig's sister, Kathy Kubicina, who was outspoken in his defense, said, ''My brother's innocent and I hope that this report just continues to back all the things that I've been saying for the past six to nine months.''

''It's absolutely wonderful and it's what we wanted all along,'' she said in a telephone interview from her Cleveland home.

Mavroules was sharply critical of the Navy for its handling of the case, saying, ''The only thing more tragic than the deaths of the 47 young seamen last April was the Navy's failure to conduct a proper investigation of the event.''

''In my judgment, there is something inherently wrong with an organization investigating itself,'' he said, suggesting the need for ''the establishment of an outside, independent investigative body for the military services.''

The full committee's chairman, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., said the case ''points out the inherent evils in any organization investigating itself.''

The Navy investigation ''fell into the trap of an excess of certitude,'' Aspin said. ''Thin gruel became red meat. Valid theories and hypotheses were converted into hard facts until the head of the investigation told one interviewer he was positive Hartwig would have been convicted in a jury trial.''

The panel report was to have been released Sunday, but its content were made public Friday.

At the Pentagon, the Navy said it had no immediate comment.

On Sept. 7, the Navy said a nearly five-month investigation had concluded that the fiery April 19, 1989, blast was caused ''by a wrongful, intentional act, most probably the insertion of a detonating device between powder bags 1 and 2'' and that the ''most likely'' suspect was the 24-year-old Hartwig.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Ships were moving into New Jersey's major ports Friday as cleanup crews finished mopping up two spills of heavy oil from New York Harbor and the waterways connecting it with Newark Bay.

Capt. Robert North, Coast Guard captain of the New York port, inspected the damaged area from the air Friday morning and reported there was "no free-floating oil seen anywhere in the harbor or in Arthur Kill and Kill Van Kull."

The kills, narrow natural waterways into New Jersey's main ports of Elizabeth and Newark, had been polluted with nearly 35,000 gallons of heavy oil spilled at two Exxon facilities since Wednesday.

Crews worked through the night to rid Arthur Kill of the latest spill, which occurred Thursday evening. A hose ruptured while crude oil was unloaded into a Texaco barge moored at the Exxon refinery at Linden, N.J., spilling 4,800 gallons of oil.

The spill came while workers in the nearby Kill van Kull waterway were cleaning 30,000 gallons of heavy, No. 6 industrial oil that leaked Wednesday from a barge at an Exxon dock, forcing Coast Guard officials to close the busy channel temporarily. The channel was reopened Thursday but vessels were warned to proceed slowly enough not to produce wake.

Another spill at the Exxon Bayway refinery in January dumped 567,000 gallons of light heating oil into the Arthur Kill when an Exxon pipeline connecting Bayonne, N.J., and Linden, N.J., ruptured. The spill polluted more than five miles of shoreline including wildfowl refuges, and it took a month to clean up.

Although no visible oil was left in the water from Wednesday's Kill van Kull spill, tar balls collected along New York's Staten Island shoreline and some beaches on the New Jersey side of the waterway, the Coast Guard said.

Six skimmer boats and a number of vacuum trucks were sucking up goo left on Atlantic beaches at Sandy Hook, N.J., off New York Harbor. Coney Island on the Brooklyn side of the harbor also was being watched by Coast Guard inspectors for oil pollution.

The Kill van Kull waterway was closed Wednesday while workers tried to contain the thick industrial fuel oil, which leaked from a 12-by-6-inch hole in a damaged tank on the barge tied up at an Exxon dock.

New York State Attorney General Robert Abrams said Thursday a criminal investigation was under way to pinpoint the cause of Wednesday's leak. Eklof Corp. of Staten Island, owners of the leaking barge, took full responsibility and said it would pay for the cleanup. A spokesman said Exxon disclaimed any liability because the oil was actually owned by an "international client" once it was loaded on the Iklof barge.

Al Appleton, commissioner of New York City's Environmental Protection Department, said that in addition to the recent spills in the New Jersey port area since Jan. 1, there had been 20 small spills of 50 to 100 gallons each. He said the spills reflected "a continuing pattern of failure on the part of the petroleum industry."

HOLYOKE, MA (MARCH 2) UPI - Money-losing Heritage Bancorp Inc. Friday announced a management house-cleaning it said would result in the departure of nine officers, including the company's No. 2 and No. 3 executives, and about eight other employees.

The dismissals are part of "a major effort on the part of Heritage to restructure management with emphasis on resolving asset quality issues and achieving cost containment objectives," said Richard B. Covell, chairman and chief executive officer.

The company, with $1.7 billion in assets, "will continue to be affected by the protracted deterioration in market conditions," Covell said. The company, parent of Heritage Bank for Savings, lost $27.9 million last year and showed losses for the past three quarters. Covell attributed the results to real estate loans, particularly commercial loans including condominium projects.

SPOKANE, WA. (MARCH 2) UPI - Convicted ''Hillside Strangler'' Kenneth Bianchi has vowed a massive effort to clear himself in the sex-and-torture murders a decade ago of 12 girls and women in California and Washington.

''I did not murder, rape or sodomize anyone,'' Bianchi wrote in a letter received Friday by United Press International.

Bianchi pleaded guilty to killing two women in Bellingham, Wash., and to teaming with his cousin Angelo Bouno in five of the 10 Hillside Strangler murders in the Los Angeles area in the late 1970s. He is serving seven life prison terms at the Washington State Penitentiary at Walla Walla.

But in his letter Bianchi said he has sufficient information, which he said will be compiled and released within a year, ''to prove great doubt in my alleged culpability in these murders.''

''The facts we have to support this now are too extensive for a newspaper article,'' he said.

''Don't presume that my convictions, plea and alleged 'confessions' are true, accurate representations of fact. There are many true facts, as yet undisclosed, which shed an entirely different light upon the voluntariness of past legal proceedings,'' he said.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals this spring is expected to rule in Bianchi's lawsuit against the city of Bellingham, in which Bianchi claimed his arrest and detention were illegal. A federal judge in Seattle threw out the 1988 suit, saying it was barred by the statute of limitations, but Bianchi appealed.

This is not the first time Bianchi has recanted his confessions, which were part of a plea-bargain and implicated Buono. He also at times has claimed amnesia and multiple personality disorder.

HEIDELBERG, WEST GERMANY (MARCH 2) UPI - The U.S. Army has halted regular patrols along West Germany's borders with East Germany and Czechoslovakia, a spokeswoman at the army's European headquarters said Friday.

The spokeswoman did not discuss details or reasons for the change in border operations. But in Washington, the Army said it reflected a change in priority of the U.S. military's role in the area, with less emphasis on observation of the East-West borders and more focus on training.

The spokeswoman in Heidelberg said although the regular patrols have been stopped, some will take place from time to time. She said the U.S. border bases will be unchanged.

Gen. Crosbie Saint, commander-in-chief of the U.S. Army-Europe and the 7th Army, directed the change, which became effective Thursday, the Army said.

''The regiments' basic missions will remain the same. They will still train to Army standards, maintain contact with appropriate FRG (West German) agencies along the border and maintain the capability to provide a covering force for U.S. units in the event of unusual situations,'' an Army document released in Washington said. ''However, the priority of the regiments' daily operations will be different.

''The most visible change is that observation posts will now only be occupied periodically for training rather than full time,'' it said. ''The regiments will go from routine border patrol operations to operations which focus primarily on training and terrain familiarization.

''Aerial patrols will be flown to maintain pilot qualification and proficiency ... overall, fewer soldiers and vehicles will be seen along the border,'' the Army said.

The change was made ''in light of the significant changes in the relationship between West and East,'' the Army said. ''We want to display our recognition of those developments by reducing the U.S. military presence along the borders.

''The requirement for U.S. forces to be prepared to reinforce FRG (West German) agencies is obviously diminished at present,'' it added.

Recent democratic reforms in both Czechoslovakia and East Germany, and an open border for people to go back and forth, have significantly decreased tensions since the Cold War days when the Army patrols were routine.

Morover, reports from East Germany say the East German army no longer is a disciplined fighting force, has low morale and a high desertion rate.

The Army statement, however, said the change should not be seen as affecting ''early warning'' time of a possible Soviet attack.

''The modifications I have outlined do not degrade our ability to accomplish that contingency phase of our missions,'' the Army said. ''As you know, our regiments work in close cooperarion with FRG border authorities who retain control of crossing points and conduct their own routine surveillance as well as our own intelligence capability.''

The Army document said no decision had been made yet as to the possible closing of some observation posts but that if any are closed, the property will be returned to the West German government.

CAPE CANAVERAL, FL (MARCH 2) UPI - The military astronauts aboard the shuttle Atlantis sailed through the halfway point of their clandestine mission Friday, presumably carrying out experiments and Earth photography as the flight winds down.

The primary goal of the 34th shuttle mission was accomplished earlier, sources said, with the successful deployment of what is believed to be an advanced 19-ton photo-reconnaissance satellite built to spy on the Soviet Union.

With the satellite in an orbit carrying it over more than 80 percent of the Soviet Union, Atlantis's five-man crew presumably settled down to a busy schedule of classified and unclassified experiments, including the usual slate of medical studies to learn more about adaptation to weightlessness.

With a near-total Air Force-imposed news blackout in effect, reporters were unable to follow the progress of the flight in any detail, but sources who requested anonymity said the mission generally was proceeding smoothly.

Lifting the veil of secrecy slightly, the Air Force allowed NASA to announce Thursday that Atlantis was ''expected'' to glide to a landing Sunday at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert northeast of Los Angeles.

The exact landing time will not be announced until 24 hours before touchdown, but sources have said the flight will last four days, 10 hours and 43 minutes, leading to a touchdown around 1:34 p.m. EST.

Following normal shuttle practice, Atlantis skipper John Creighton and co-pilot John Casper, both 46, were expected to test the spaceplane's hydraulic steering system Saturday and to test fire rocket thrusters to make sure the orbiter is ready for its blazing re-entry Sunday.

Once back on the ground, Navy Capt. Creighton, Air Force Col. Casper, Marine Lt. Col. David Hilmers, 40; Air Force Col. Richard ''Mike'' Mullane 44, and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Pierre Thuot, 34, planned to fly back to their homes in Houston after brief medical checks and reunions with friends and family members.

Back at the Kennedy Space Center, meanwhile, engineers are gearing up for the next shuttle launch, the April 12 flight of the shuttle Discovery on a long-awaited showcase mission to put the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope in orbit.

Discovery is scheduled to be moved from its hangar to the nearby Vehicle Assembly Building Monday for attachment to a pair of solid-fuel boosters and an external fuel tank. If all goes well, the assembled space vehicle will be hauled to launch pad 39B March 16 for final processing.

A few miles from Discovery's hangar, technicians were busy Friday inspecting Atlantis's spent solid-fuel boosters, which fell by parachute into the Atlantic Ocean east of Jacksonville, Fla., Wednesday after the shuttle's spectacular 2:50 a.m. liftoff.

During Atlantis's fiery climb to space, long-range cameras showed what appeared to be chunks of material shooting away from the shuttle about one minute and 15 seconds into flight.

A spokesman for booster-maker Morton Thiokol Inc. said the material was made up of hot ''slag'' - ash from burned propellant - and that such chunks are routinely blasted out of shuttle rockets during ascent. He said the nighttime launching made the phenomenon more apparent than usual.

While the condition of the redesigned boosters will not be known until they can be taken apart and inspected, engineers said Friday no obvious problems had been noted so far.

GENEVA, Switzerland (MARCH 2) UPI - Afghanistan urgently needs massive humanitarian and economic aid, which can be supplied despite continued fighting between the Soviet-backed government and U.S.-sponsored rebels, a United Nations official said Friday.

U.N. Afghan assistance coordinator Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan said the fighting is concentrated mostly around the capital city of Kabul and other cities and is therefore ''not a serious obstacle'' to getting help to the people.

Saruddin, uncle of the Aga Khan, is a former U.N. high commissioner for refugees. He said at a news conference that the proposed Afghan aid program for 1990 involves spending of $650 million for health and agricultural assistance.

Getting help to rural areas depends, however, on clearing countless mines laid during the war, Sadruddin said. He said about 2,000 Afghans have already received special training for mine-clearing operations.

Last year, he said, U.N. aid reached people in 29 provinces. This year's program will concentrate on ''zones of calm'' where there is now little if any fighting, he said.

''I have every hope that a large number of refugees will return to these areas this summer,'' he said.

Sadruddin said he would be going to Afghanistan in two weeks and would also visit Pakistan, where there are an estimated 3 million Afghan refugees.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - Energy Secretary James Watkins said Friday the government must find a volunteer site for a temporary nuclear waste dump within two years to avert a potential storage crisis at 27 nuclear plants by 1998.

Watkins, testifying before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said the 27 plants would run out of on-site storage space for highly radioactive spent reactor fuel if the Energy Department did not meet a Jan. 31, 1998, deadline to begin accepting waste shipments for disposal.

He said the only way his agency can meet that legally required deadline is to persuade a state or Indian tribe within two years to volunteer a site for a ''monitored, retrievable storage'' facility.

Watkins said siting a ''MRS facility'' was essential because the department would not be able to open its planned permanent dump site in Nevada until the year 2010 at the earliest.

And he said a MRS site had to be found within two years to give his department adequate time for geological studies to assure wastes could be safely stored at the proposed location.

If the Energy Department cannot find a volunteer site and has to locate a MRS facility over the objections of a host state, waste shipments could not be accepted until the year 2002 at the earliest, Watkins said.

Without a volunteer site, Watkins told senators, ''What we're going to have in 1998 is 27 nuclear power plants without adequate storage capacity.''

Watkins said those plants probably would be able to find additional storage space at other nuclear plants for their overflow waste, which he estimated could total 10,000 metric tons.

But he expressed concern about forcing massive shipments of spent fuel around the country, saying, ''This would pose a difficult transportation problem.''

Watkins said he would provide Congress with a list of the 27 nuclear plants facing storage problems. Energy Department officials were not immediately available to specify which plants were involved.

Watkins said some House members have approached him about locating a MRS facility in their districts, but he acknowledged it would be difficult to find a volunteer site, given intense public concern about the environmental risks that might be posed by a radioactive waste dump.

But he said Americans had to recognize the alternative to a MRS facility was even less palatable - continued storage of highly radioactive waste at dozens of nuclear plants around the country.

''They are going to be de facto MRS facilities,'' he said.

Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, said Americans also had to realize that, without a federally operated MRS facility, they were paying twice for nuclear waste disposal.

McClure noted that, under federal law, all utility ratepayers now pay a special fee on their electric bills to finance the government's nuclear waste disposal program.

He said that if utilities are forced to expand on-site storage space, ratepayers will have to pay additional charges on top of the special federal fee.

In addition to finding a host state, Watkins said the Energy Department needed Congress to change federal laws that link construction of a MRS facility to progress in establishing the proposed permanent dump site at Yucca Mountain in Nevada.

The linkage was inserted in federal law in 1987 by lawmakers whose states were under consideration by Congress to host the MRS facility. Those legislators were concerned Nevada officials would succeed in blocking the Yucca Mountain project, making it possible a completed MRS facility would become the permanent dump site.

Watkins said if Congress did not end the linkage between the MRS facility and the Yucca Mountain project, the earliest a MRS facility could open would be 2007.

(MARCH 2) UPI - The Commerce Department says the index of the nation's economic indicators showed NO change last month after two straight monthly rises. Building starts led the pack of the 11 areas of the economy tracked followed by vendor performance and manufacturing orders. For the 12-month period ending in January, the overall index fell by five-tenths of one percent, compared to the prior year's four-point-eight percent increase.

Although Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu told his parliament today that trade protectionism threatens global free trade, aides say he will NOT make trade concessions to President Bush at their California summit today. Kaifu hinted that he want both leaders at the two-day meeting in Palm Springs to speak candidly about a variety of issues NOT related to economics.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater says Bush plans to state the U-S position in ''a very straightforward, productive fashion.'' The meeting comes following the breakdown of talks in Japan last week aimed at easing trade tensions between the two economic superpowers. The U-S trade deficit with Japan has hovered near 50-BILLION dollars since the mid-1980's.

A 10-member U-S congressional delegation headed by Pennsylvania Democrat William Gray is in South Africa for scheduled talks with President F-W de Klerk and other senior government officials. Gray, the highest-ranking black in the House leadership, says the purpose of the fact-finding mission is to determine the ''depth'' of ''dynamic changes'' recently implemented by de Klerk.

NAIROBI, Kenya (MARCH 2) UPI - A representative of the international relief organization Oxfam accused Ethiopia of deception Friday in proposing to airlift food to people at risk of starvation in northern Ethiopia.

The airlift plan was a disguise for reinforcing the besieged Ethiopian army in the north, said Susan Watkins, of Oxfam Canada, in an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp.'s African service monitored in Nairobi Kenya.

Watkins said people were already going to food distribution points too weak to eat, but the government's plans would not help.

A U.N. official, meanwhile, arrived in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa Friday to discuss ways to speed up the international emergency food aid for an estimated 4 million Ethiopians threatened by starvation.

U.N. spokesman Francois Giuliani said Abdulrahim Farah, a U.N. undersecretary-general, will consult with the Ethiopian government on the emergency situation affecting the population in areas struck by drought and fighting between rebel and government troops.

U.N. officials have asked the Ethiopian government to send supplies by trucks within the next 10 days and the United Nations will make available long-haul trucks and other logistical support, he said.

Ethiopia appealed Thursday for $14 million per month to pay for aircraft and trucks. These, it said, would be used to move food into areas to which it has no access because they are held by rebels.

About 3.6 million people face possible starvation in rebel-held Tigre province and rebel-contested Eritrea this year.

If supplies do not get through the country faces a repeat of the famine of 1984-85 in which more than a million people died.

But Watkins said she is convinced that talk of famine relief is a front for moving military supplies to the Eritrean capital of Asmara, 470 miles north of the capital.

Three weeks of fighting with the secessionist Eritrean People's Liberation Front had left the nearby Red Sea port of Massawa in rebel hands, she said.

''They (the government) are basically under siege at Asmara and they want to use the airlift to reinforce their troops,'' she said.

''I'm completely convinced that this is their plan,'' Watkins said.

The Oxfam official said the Ethiopian land army has no control over Massawa port - the only route into northern Ethiopia from the sea - and that the Ethiopian air force was dropping napalm and other bombs on warehouses at the port, setting fire to grain warehouses.

She also questioned the government's appeal for trucks, saying she did not know how it could truck food through rebel lines in central Ethiopia. It has always refused to discuss such trucking, she said.

Consequently, Oxfam was concentrating its relief efforts on cross-border transportation of food from neighboring Sudan, she said, hoping to move about 15,000 tons a month.

(MARCH 2) UPI - A senior executive at Greyhound Lines disputes union claims that bad faith bargaining by management resulted in today's walkout by more than nine-thousand union workers at the nation's largest intercity bus line. In Lusaka, Zambia, the African National Congress today named Nelson Mandela as the group's deputy president. The U-S Embassy in Egypt says at least one American died in yesterday's fire in a hotel near the Cairo airport which killed 19 people. Another three U-S citizens are missing. The fire started when sparks from an oven in the hotel's lobby set ablaze a decorative tent pitched inside the building. A fire department officer says hotel officials ignored requests for the tent's removal.

Cleanup crews are trying to contain a 48-hundred-gallon spill of heavy crude in New Jersey's Arthur Kill waterway. The spill is the area's third this year. It occurred when a hose ruptured while oil was unloaded into a Texaco barge moored at an Exxon refinery in Linden, New Jersey, last night. The latest spill comes as crews mopped up thick industrial fuel that leaked from a barge at another Exxon dock.

Security sources in Lebanon report General Michel Aoun's militia has resumed attacks against forces aligned with rival Christian leader Samir Geagea. There's NO indication on the number of casualties from today's bloodshed, the second in 24 hours. Heavy rocket fire prevented rescue workers from retrieving the dead and wounded while firefighters were unable to put out dozens of fires that raged in east Beirut.

SCOTTSDALE, AZ (MARCH 2) UPI - More than 9,000 Greyhound employees walked off the job Friday, leaving passengers across the country stranded in the midst of a bitter contract dispute between drivers and the nation's largest intercity bus line.

Failing to resolve their differences at the bargaining table and with no new talks scheduled, picket lines went up at 12:05 a.m. MST outside Greyhound terminals across the country.

Within hours, three strike-related incidents were reported, including one in Chicago, where a ''Molotov cocktail'' was apparently planted under a car. In Cleveland, a picket claimed he was struck by a departing bus driven by a strike-breaker. A similar incident was reported in Houston. There were no serious injuries.

The strike centered on pay and job security issues. Contact talks started four months ago.

In a statement from company headquarters in Dallas, P. Anthony Lannie, executive vice president and Greyhound's chief negotiator, said some buses were running Friday with either replacement drivers or employees who are not honoring picket lines.

''The company will operate as many schedules as possible today and through the weekend,'' Lannie said, adding Greyhound expects to have the entire system back in operation before the end of March.

The company said it did not have figures on how many buses were running Friday, or how many employees were working.

Jeffrey Nelson, a spokesman for the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, charged that workers were forced to strike because Greyhound ''has refused to bargain in good faith.''

In lieu of an agreement, the company imposed its latest contract offer, one made Jan. 10, at 12:01 a.m., he said.

Lannie said Greyhound made ''extraordinary efforts'' to resolve the dispute. He said he ''negotiated directly'' with Edward M. Strait, president of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, ''for most of the week.''

''Although he and I reached agreement on solutions, he was unable to sell those solutions to members of the council,'' Lannie asserted.

The strike caught travelers by surprise.

In the Jackson, Miss., Greyhound terminal, Flossie Westbrook, 66, said she was not told of the strike threat Thursday morning when she purchased a ticket to Chicago.

''I'm shocked, but where else is there for me to go?'' she said. ''I've got to get to Chicago.''

She said she contacted Amtrak, but was told all seats to Chicago were booked.

At New York's Port Authority Bus Terminal, the biggest and busiest in the nation, dozens of workers wore picket signs that read, ''We can't live on a dog's wage,'' and ''Stop Greyhound union busting.''

''It's modern-day slavery,'' said Percy Williams, who earns about $18,000 a year as a Greyhound mechanic. ''Other company's bus cleaners make almost as much as me.''

In addition to 6,300 drivers, the contract that expired at midnight Thursday covered 1,475 maintenance workers and 1,660 office workers in telephone information centers in Omaha, Neb., and Charlotte, N.C., and the accounting center in West Des Moines, Iowa.

Greyhound serves about 9,500 communities in the 48 contiguous states and says it provides the only public transportation to about 9,000 communities that have no airlines or rail passenger service.

Lannie said the company offered a package worth $14.1 million, or 6.9 percent, in the first year. ''That is an excellent offer from a company that lost almost $20 million over the last three years and is far above the average of company-union negotiated settlements of the last two years '' he said.

Greyhound said its package was worth $63 million over three years.

''That is all this company can afford,'' Lannie said, ''and the union did not dispute the company's inability to increase its offer. Instead, they wanted us to increase fares for our passengers by 10 percent and we refused to do that.''

The union said its counterproposal, made Thursday, would have cost the company no more than $20 million in the first year and provided wage and benefit increases averaging between 4 and 5 percent.

ANCHORAGE, AK (MARCH 2) UPI - Capt. Joseph Hazelwood got sick Friday and his trial on charges that he recklessly crashed his Exxon oil tanker onto a reef was delayed until Monday, when prosecutors will try to wrap up their case.

''The defendant is entitled to be present,'' state Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone told the jury, in announcing that Hazelwood had the flu and that jurors would end their fifth week early.

''I expect it's going to take another two or three weeks,'' Johnstone told the 12 jurors and three alternates hearing the case against the former skipper of the Exxon Valdez.

Since the trial started on charges arising from the nation's biggest oil spill, there have been early adjournments for blizzards, volcanic eruptions with ashfall and influenza.

Forty-one prosecution witnesses have been paraded before the jury, and assistant district attorney Brent Cole said he needs at least one more day maybe two, for his last few witnesses.

But the prosecution case, virtually complete, has not yet proven the charge that Hazelwood was drunk.

A handful of prosecution witnesses have testified that Hazelwood sat in bars drinking vodka before sailing his loaded tanker out of Valdez last March 23 to a disastrous collision with Bligh Reef a few minutes after midnight March 24. But these same witnesses, and numerous others, asserted that Hazelwood acted normally and showed no signs of intoxication or impairment.

Prosecutors still plan on bringing a toxicology expert to the stand to try to prove that the moderate level of alcohol found in Hazelwood's blood 10

1/2 hours after the wreck was an illegally high level of alcohol when the skipper sailed out of the Alaska oil port.

The foundation of the case against Hazelwood is that he drank too much, made alcohol-impaired, reckless decisions, such as leaving the bridge of the ship to unqualified crewmen during an iceberg detour before the wreck and then, after the grounding, trying to rock the tanker free, creating a greater risk to the ship, its crew and its leaking cargo.

Hazelwood's own tape-recorded words to the Coast Guard - played for jury - indicated that he intended to maneuver the vessel off the rocks.

Marine experts said it appeared as if Hazelwood carried out his intentions wiggling the rudder and running the engines, trying to get the damaged tanker free.

If the ship had come off the rocks, experts said it would have been in danger of capsizing, endangering the crew and leaking more than the 11 million gallons that spewed out of cargo tanks loaded with 53 million gallons.

Hazelwood's defense lawyers have had relatively smooth sailing through most of the prosecution case.

Witnesses called to testify against Hazelwood have said that the skipper acted in a cool manner, calm and in command; that if his course orders had been followed the tanker would have missed the reef; that the Exxon Valdez was following a detour routinely taken by other tankers; that just about everyone thought, mistakenly, that the Coast Guard monitored tankers on radar in the area of Bligh Reef, and that the crewmen actually driving the ship failed to properly negotiate their turn in time in avoid the well-marked reef.

However, Hazelwood's absence from the bridge - which itself could be judged reckless by the jury - has been the subject of harsh criticism. Hazelwood was the only officer licensed to command the tanker in Prince William Sound, but about 10 or 15 minutes before the accident, he left the bridge to do paperwork in his quarters while an unqualified third mate and a helmsman with a reputation for incomptence in steering had control.

Defense lawyers have said alcohol had nothing to do with the wreck and that Hazelwood tried to keep the unstable ship on the rocks, once it grounded, to prevent a worse disaster.

Hazelwood, 43, of Huntington, N.Y., the only crewman charged, faces seven years, three months in jail and a $61,000 fine if convicted of reckless endangerment, operating the tanker while intoxicated, negligent discharge of oil and criminal mischief.

The trial began Jan. 29.

CHICAGO (MARCH 2) UPI - Aggressive buying in soybean oil futures carried over to soybeans Friday and both closed higher on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Grain futures were mostly lower in relatively light trading.

Most of the buying in soybean oil was based on expectations that export demand will remain strong. Oil made session highs about midday but gave up some of the gains to profit-taking just before the final bell.

Soybeans were under commercial selling pressure early in the day but followed the oil to higher levels and closed with moderate gains.

Light demand at home and overseas weighed on soybean meal values.

Corn prices were narrowly mixed in lackluster trading. The main features were long-liquidation and profit-taking after recent gains.

Wheat turned lower about midday when short-covering gave way to renewed selling. Continued favorable weather in the Plains States pressured new-crop wheat prices.

Country movement was light.

At the close, corn was off 1/2 to up 3/4, soybeans unchanged to up 4 1/4, wheat down 1/2 to 2 and oats up 3/4 to off 1/2.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Donald Trump has invited the ''other woman,'' Marla Maples, to the opening of his Taj Mahal Casino Resort in Atlantic City Apr. 5, but she will not be his date, a spokesman said.

Dan Klores, a member of the public relations firm who represents the billionaire real estate developer, said in published reports Friday he did not know whether Trump also has invited his estranged wife, Ivana, to the fete, which Trump has vowed will be the party of the decade.

''Marla Maples is invited but she is not going to be Mr. Trump's date,'' Klores said. ''He will not have a date.''

Maples, a Georgia-born model and aspiring actress, has been in hiding since she was identified as one of the reasons Trump walked out on his wife last month. Her press agent, Chuck Jones, said she would be doing Trump a ''favor'' by attending the opening of what Trump is calling ''The Eighth Wonder of the World.''

''Donald Trump asked her to come and she agreed,'' Jones said.

Jones refused to comment on reports that Trump was using Maples as a means for hyping publicity surrounding the world's largest casino. The Taj project was taken over by Trump after a takeover battle with entertainer Merv Griffin and will cost him nearly $1 billion by the time it is finished.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - Rasheeda Moore, a former fashion model who lured Washington, D.C., Mayor Marion Barry to an FBI sting arrest on a crack cocaine charge pleaded no contest Friday to misdemeanor drunken driving.

Moore, 38, whose legal name is Hazel Diane Moore, was not present in Van Nuys Municipal Court, but entered her plea through her attorney, Ronald Lewis.

Commissioner Mitchell Block fined Moore $927.50, ordered her to attend alcohol abuse classes for 90 days and placed her on three years' informal probation.

Block also restricted her driving privileges for 90 days, ordering her to use a car only to drive to and from work and the alcohol abuse classes.

Moore, a native of Washington who now lives in Burbank, was arrested for drunken driving on New Year's Day in North Hollywood.

Police said they initially stopped her car because she was driving without headlights. Officers then took her into custody for driving under the influence.

Moore, who did not have a driver's license in her possession, was taken to the Van Nuys jail, but was later released without having to post bail.

Moore is a former fashion model, Essence Magazine cover girl and long-time friend of the Washington mayor.

Law enforcement officials said she is the woman who lured Barry on Jan. 18 to the Vista International Hotel in Washington, where he was arrested on suspicion of possessing crack cocaine.

Moore, working with the FBI, allegedly telephoned Barry, persuaded him to visit her at the hotel and helped provide him with crack cocaine, officials said.

The FBI said it arrested Barry after secretly videotaping him smoking the crack.

Barry, 53, on Wednesday pleaded innocent at his arraignment in federal court to five misdemeanor counts of cocaine possession and three felony counts of perjury.

The perjury counts stem from accusations that Barry lied under oath about his alleged cocaine use.

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson ordered Barry's trial to begin June 4.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The Treasury Department announced Friday that the United States and Soviet Union are planning to negotiate a new income tax treaty to replace a pact that was signed in 1973.

The meetings are "expected to begin in Washington in about a month," a statement issued by the department said. "The existing treaty ... is outmoded in several respects."

Such treaties address the taxation of Americans working aboard and foreign nationals working in the United States and establish the groundwork for cooperation between taxing authorities in different nations.

"The negotiations will take into account the model income tax treaties published by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the United Nations, and the U.S. Treasury Department," the statement said.

The round of talks will also take into account "tax treaties recently concluded by the two countries and changes in their respective income tax laws," the statement also said.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Singing the praises of New York, Mayor David Dinkins and tourism industry leaders Friday declared an all-out drive to bring the annual Grammy Awards ceremony back to the Big Apple from Los Angeles.

''They feel that they have the divine right to host the Grammys forever,'' said Loews Hotels President Jonathan Tisch. ''We think it's time for the Grammys to come home to New York.''

''Music's premier awards belong in America's premier music city,'' chimed in Dinkins.

Los Angeles has been home to the annual music awards ceremony every year since 1976 except two, 1981 and 1988, when it was held in New York City.

Before 1976, it tended to alternate between the two cities, although it was held once in Nashville.

Dinkins insisted the ceremony must return to what he called the ''world's entertainment capital'' and not so subtly noted that bringing the show back to the city could mean some $30 million next year for the ailing local economy.

He named American Express Travel Related Services, North America President Edwin Cooperman to head the city's 1991 Grammys host committee, which will lobby the National Academy of Recording Artists and Scientists.

The music industry group's 33 trustees were to make a decision at their board meeting in May.

''Only God in his wisdom knows what the hell they're going to do. I surely don't,'' NARAS President Michael Greene said of the trustees in an interview from Los Angeles. ''It's impossible to predict.''

''We're betwixt a rock and a hard place,'' Greene said, stressing that both cities put on a great show.

Greene said it does cost a lot more money to put on the show in New York because the need to relocate the NARAS staff and production company from Los Angeles for the event, which in 1988 was a five day affair in New York that culminated with the televised awards program.

How much more money? Hundreds of thousands of dollars more, Greene said.

But he said the NARAS board's decision is not allowed to be based on monetary considerations.

This is not the first time New York has formed a special committee to lobby for the show, which would be held at Radio City Music Hall.

The city in 1988 formed a similar committee and was successful in getting the show. Los Angeles then formed its own committee to lure it back.

''They copied us,'' sniffed Tisch, who headed the New York group.

Dinkins' predecessor, Edward Koch, pushed unsuccessfully for years to have it put in writing that the show would alternate between East and West coasts.

The first Grammy ceremony was held in 1959 in Los Angeles. The first live show was broadcast from the Hollywood Palladium in 1971.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Donald Trump filed a lawsuit Friday seeking to prevent heavyweight champion Buster Douglas from fighting at the Mirage Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, Nev., and asking for more than $50 million in damages.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan against the Mirage and Douglas, claims an unlawful interference in his right to hold a Douglas-Mike Tyson rematch at his Atlantic City, N.J., casino.

The fighter's manager, John Johnson, also was named a defendant.

The billionaire developer claims Trump Plaza has a contract with promoter Don King to hold the Douglas-Tyson bout June 18 in Atlantic City. Before signing to fight Tyson last month in Tokyo, Douglas gave King contractual rights to his next fight.

However, Douglas and Johnson signed a two-fight agreement with the Mirage reportedly worth $60 million to the champion. The contract is contingent upon a lawsuit the boxer filed in Nevada against King, seeking to break his deal with the promoter. King also filed suit last week against Douglas in New York.

Douglas claims King violated his promotional contract by not abiding by the terms and by attempting to harm Douglas by trying to overturn his victory against Tyson. King and Tyson protested the outcome of that match, claiming Douglas received a long count when he was knocked down before knocking out Tyson.

Trump claims the entire Northeast, particularly New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, will benefit from the proceeds of a Douglas-Tyson bout and has been looking forward to the event.

BOSTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Gov. Michael S. Dukakis underwent a two-hour, 10-minute operation Friday to repair two broken bones in his left hand and faces another round of surgery for a torn ligament in his right hand, aides said.

The operation at Brigham and Women's Hospital was to repair damage suffered Feb. 24 when Dukakis slipped and fell against rocks while trying to dislodge his father-in-law's car from a snowdrift near his western Massachusetts home.

It was the latest bit of bad luck for Dukakis, 56, who has been on a political and personal slide since losing the 1988 presidential election. First lady Kitty Dukakis has been hospitalized twice in the last year for treatment of alcoholism and depression.

The three-term governor has also seen his popularity plummet to the depths as the state's fiscal problems drag on.

''It means either my bones are getting more brittle or I am falling less well,'' Dukakis quipped at a news conference earlier in the week. At a separate forum he joked the injury was sustained taking a swing at a political columnist.

Doctors performed an ''open reduction and internal fixation'' on the fourth and fifth metacarpals, located between his fingers and left wrist, aides said. A single screw was inserted to set the bones of the fourth metacarpal and a plate and screw were used to repair the fifth.

He was given a plaster splint which will be replaced next week by a removable one. Doctors projected he will make a full recovery within six weeks.

Doctors opted to delay surgery to repair a torn ligament inside the right thumb. Dukakis will wear a splint on that hand too, with additional surgery scheduled within the next few weeks.

Aides said one member of the surgical team was Ruby Sampson, a former welfare recipient who moved off the rolls after being trained as a surgical technician by the Employment and Training Choices program. Her success was a staple of Dukakis presidential campaign rhetoric.

''She is one of the best surgical technicians around,'' Dukakis said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - A KGB defector said Friday he told U.S. officials about an apparent KGB plot to get ''physically close'' and assassinate Pope John Paul II a year before a Turkish gunman shot and wounded the pontiff.

Victor Sheymov also told a packed news conference that KGB bodyguards assassinated Afghan leader Hafizullah Amin in 1979 and that the Soviet agency probably assassinated Pakistani President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq in a 1988 airplane explosion.

Sheymov, who wore tinted glasses and joked with reporters that his unnatural-looking blonde hair was a wig, also asserted there were two State Department employees working for the KGB but refused to say if they were still in place or had been given other details.

Sheymov, 43, surfaced through a story in The Washington Post on Friday, in which he said he defected with his wife and child on May 16, 1980, after walking into a U.S. Embassy in another unspecified country earlier in the year.

A KGB major working in communications intelligence, Sheymov disappeared from his Moscow apartment, leaving clues to indicate he might be dead.

Before his decision to defect, "I was like everyone else, heavily brainwashed." But once inside the KGB, he had access to information others did not have.

''When I saw the difference between what I had been told ... and what I knew, I had to reconcile that,'' said Sheymov.

He said he restudied Marx and Lenin and ''at the end I realized the system was the most suppressive system on Earth that ever existed.''

He said he could have stood up in opposition but, ''If I did that ... I would be dead in a hurry.''

Sheymov said he could have ''blown his brains out'' but he finally decided his ''only choice was to defect.''

Once spirited to the United States in 1980, he told the CIA that during a trip to Poland in 1979 he learned of a KGB cable from Moscow to the local KGB chief.

''The task was to find out how to get physically close to the pope,'' Sheymov said. ''In KGB slang, it is clearly understood that when you say get physically close to somebody, there is only one reason...to assassinate them."

''Words like murder and assassination are never used,'' he said. ''They are substituted by much gentler means of expression.''

Sheymov, who said he still works on projects for the U.S. government for pay, said he was ''quite sure'' the Soviets were behind the May 1981 attempt by gunman Mehmet Ali Agca that left the pope wounded.

Sheymov, asked if he knew of any assassinations directly carried out by the KGB, said ''none,'' adding assassinations often were carried out by ''foreign nationals.'' He also said those targeted were identified only by code names, meaning he could not connect victims with plans.

''If Joe Blow dies somewhere in New York, how am I going to know it was the same man inquired about four months ago?'' he said.

Sheymov said regarding KGB plans for the pope, ''I happened to know the pope's code name.'' Asked what it was, he said, ''I don't remember,'' but added the key message referred directly to the ''pope.''

Sheymov, who said he was ''treated extremely well by the American people,'' said he could not blame U.S. officials on how they responded to the threat against the pope because ''I don't know what they did with the information.

''It was very unspecific. What do you do, put 10 extra bodyguards around the pope? Taste his food?''

Sheymov later asserted the KGB assassinated Amin in 1979 at the time of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The KGB ''induced him with paranoia of assassination plot and the idea that only the KGB could protect him. He had KGB bodyguards and they killed him.''

When challenged about his earlier statement that he had no direct knowledge of any assassinations, he said ''I didn't think of that.''

PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA (MARCH 2) UPI - Czechoslovakia's Communist Party will run on a nationalist mixed-market platform program in parliamentary elections expected to be held June 8, the party said Friday.

''Never again will the Communist Party strive for a monopoly of power,'' party First Secretary Vasil Mohorita said in introducing the party's platform to reporters.

After introducing the position paper, Mohorita complained of the treatment he said Communists have received at the hands of the state-owned mass media since last year's non-violent popular rebellion. He also complained about the treatment of Communist employees of Czechoslvak radio.

''We know that there are Communists expelled from their posts, even though they have all the requisite qualifications to hold these posts,'' Mohorita said.

The party has assembled a group of legal advisers to help such party members gain legal redress, he said.

Mohorita said many party members were forced to accept jobs as manual laborers. But he said he knew of no one sent to work as furnace stokers or window washers, the assignments commonly given to dissidents thrown out of work by the Communists during the ''normalization'' that followed the Prague Spring uprising two decades ago.

BARTOW, FL (MARCH 2) UPI - The mother of a 2-year-old boy who died last July after being dunked headfirst in a toilet for soiling his pants pleaded guilty to second-degree murder Friday as part of a plea agreement.

Sheryl McGee Coe, 21, had been facing a mandatory life sentence if convicted on first-degree murder and aggravated child abuse charges. She now faces a maximum prison sentence of 30 years on the lesser charge.

Polk County Circuit Judge Dale Durrance set a sentencing hearing for April 10.

Coe's husband, Thomas, 22, also is facing first-degree murder and aggravated child abuse charges in the death of Bradley McGee, which sparked statewide reforms in child abuse legislation.

Assistant State Attorney John Aguero said the agreement does not require Sheryl Coe to testify against her husband, but he said she will be subpoenaed to testify for the state when Thomas Coe is tried July 9. Aguero said he is seeking the death penalty for the husband.

Abandoned by his mother at a Lakeland mall when he was 3-months-old, Bradley spent most of his life in foster care. HRS placed him back with the Coes two months before he died.

Florida legislators poured millions of dollars into the welfare department's child care programs in November to hire more caseworkers in the wake of Bradley's death.

SAN FRANCISCO (MARCH 2) UPI - Recent weakness in Tokyo financial markets and the yen's decline against the dollar could mean a hiatus in aggressive Japanese acquisitions in the U.S. real estate market, analysts said Friday.

Wall Street shrugged off this week's volatile swings in Japan's financial markets, but U.S. real estate markets may not be so fortunate if, as some analysts expect, Japanese investors slow their purchases of U.S. real estate.

The Japanese yen has fallen nearly five percent against the U.S. dollar since late January. Combined with a 14 percent decrease in the Tokyo stock market's benchmark index since the first of the year, the decline has left many Japanese investors with far less capital and buying power to acquire U.S. property, analysts said.

"That is ultimately going to have the effect of the Japanese pulling back their investments in the United States - not selling the assets they have, but not making the large investments they have in the past," said Michael Evans, national director of real estate advisory services for the accounting firm Ernst & Young.

The biggest factor is the rising dollar against the yen, trading in New York late Friday at more than 150 to the dollar for the first time since June 1989.

Already the impact is being felt. Jack Cooper, managing director of Bank of America's investment real estate group, said he met with the president of a large Japanese corporation this week and was told to expect a slowdown.

"They're just going to have to be more selective," said Cooper, whose group expects to purchase about $150 million in U.S. real estate for Japanese investors this year. "They won't be able to pay the top dollar they might have in the past."

Others doubt Tokyo's recent financial troubles will have much impact at all. "Look at a few years ago. (The yen) was trading at 225 (to the dollar) and they were still buying," said Yosh Kumagai, a real estate broker with Charter Commercial Brokerage Co. in San Jose, Calif. "They are buying for the long term. This is not going to stop them from making sound investments."

Although the Japanese have been known to pay extremely high prices for "trophy" office buildings such as Arco Plaza in downtown Los Angeles, most experts do not believe a Japanese pullback would bring down soaring prices in urban areas.

Large U.S. pension funds have become extremely aggressive bidders on many large projects and are likely to pick up where the Japanese left off, real estate buyers said.

Nobody expects the Japanese to stop buying U.S. real estate completely. Despite double-digit office vacancy rates in most large U.S. cities, the Japanese can still make more from their money in the Unites States than in Japan because prices are much lower.

Last year, the Japanese purchased, directly and indirectly, about $14.5 billion in U.S. real estate, Ernst & Young estimates, down from $16 billion in 1989.

Tokyo's money has become an important source of capital for U.S. developers. With the collapse of the savings and loan industry and the virtual disappearance of real estate "syndicates" that funded many projects in the early 1980s, money to build apartment buildings, shopping centers and other major projects has become harder to find.

"If there is some slowdown or delay in their investments because of these trends in Tokyo, it could make it more difficult for some of these people to fund their deals," said Steven Hlebasko, director of acquisitions for Trans-Pacific Partners Co., a San Francisco firm that manages more than $130 million in U.S. real estate holdings for Japanese clients.

Even if the Tokyo Stock Exchange bounces back and the value of the yen rebounds to previous levels below 145 to a dollar, uncertainity will remain, Hlebasko said.

"The Japanese tend to be very cautious," he said. "So once the trends are played out in their stock market, there will still be a period of time before some of the investors resurface."

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The Transportation Department announced new rules Friday forbidding airlines from discriminating against the disabled but allowing carriers to bar the blind and some others from seats in emergency exit rows.

''These regulations will ensure that U.S. air carriers provide consistent, predictable services to disabled travelers, without discrimination and with accommodations the passengers need,'' Transporation Secretary Samuel Skinner said in a statement announcing the regulations.

''The regulations accomplish the goal consistent with the safety of all passengers,'' he said.

But on one of the most fiercely contested issues pitting people with disabilities, especially the blind, against the government and the airline industry, the Federal Aviation Administration issued a separate rule limiting seating in exit rows to people deemed able of working the emergency evacuation exits and leaving the plane quickly.

FAA Administrator James Busey acknowledged the exit row rule raised issues ''both difficult and controversial'' because ''they require, in the interest of the safety of all passengers, that some passengers be treated differently than others, depending on their physical abilities.''

But, he said, the agency has found that ''the fastest possible evacuation of the aircraft'' is critical to survival in accidents and because of the ''pivotal role'' played by those seated closest to the exits, it was necessary to establish passenger eligibility for those seats.

Anthony Broderick, the FAA's associate administrator for regulation told a news conference that, in addition to the blind, airlines may be able to bar from exit rows parents with small children, the elderly, people with some forms of temporary or permanent disability that impairs carrying out certain functions, people who are obese and children under 15.

The new rules were required by Congress when it passed the Air Carrier Access Act of 1986 forbidding discrimination on the basis of handicap in air travel.

The new rules will be published officially on Tuesday and are to take effect 30 days later.

Robert Ashby, deputy assistant general counsel at the Transportation Department, estimated the cost of the rules to the airlines would be about $20 million a year over the next 20 years.

Under the rules, an airline will be limited in its ability to refuse service to disabled passengers, may not restrict the number of people with disabilities on a flight and may not require a person with a disability to travel with an attendant, except in certain extreme circumstances. If an attendant is required, the airline must pay for the service.

In addition, the rules require airlines, as they refurbish cabins, to make the planes more accessible for the disabled, including replacement of current aisle armrests with movable ones to permit easier transfer of people from wheelchairs to aircraft seats.

Also all newly ordered widebody aircraft - those with two aisles - must have accessible lavatories, on-board wheelchairs and cabin storage space for folding wheelchairs.

Boarding assistance and baggage accommodation for manual and electrical wheelchairs are also required under the rules, but for some accommodations airlines can require up to 48-hours advance notice.

Facilities and services at airports owned or operated by airlines would have to meet the same accessibility standards that federally assisted airports must meet.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., reviewing events in the Soviet bloc with a suspicious eye, warned Friday that Mikhail Gorbachev wants to turn the Soviet Union into ''a lean, mean powerhouse'' that will dominate the world.

Helms, the leading conservative voice in the Senate, said every step Gorbachev has taken inside the Soviet Union has been ''to consolidate and centralize his own personal power'' and eventually he will become ''the great dictator of the Soviet Union.''

Speaking to a session of the Conservative Political Action Conference, Helms said the central feature of U.S. foreign policy should be ''the break-up of the Soviet Union.''

Self-determination for all nations, ''including those in artificial conglomerates like the Soviet Union, should be the keystone of our foreign policy goals,'' said Helms, the senior Republican member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Helms said Gorbachev has presided over a massive buildup of Soviet nuclear and conventional arms. ''This military perestroika, or restructuring, was the precondition for his political perestroika.''

Helms said there is ''no sign that Gorbachev is any less aggressive than previous regimes. He is, in fact, more aggressive.

''But he smiles, he jokes, he practices his PR in a remarkable way. And the American news media has become putty in his hands.''

Gorbachev wants to ''restructure the world,'' Helms charged. ''He wants to turn the Soviet Union into a lean, mean powerhouse, and he wants to turn the world into a socialist system dominated by the Soviet Union.''

Helms suggested the collapse of the Warsaw Pact is part of Gorbachev's plan because he ''no longer needs a string of old-fashioned buffer states on his borders.''

Gorbachev ''has almost demilitarized Europe, and moved the arena of confrontation to the Third World and the direct U.S.-Soviet nuclear rivalry.''

''His policy now is to dismantle the out-dated Communist system in those countries, set up alliances with his former subjects, and let the West pay to rebuild the destroyed social and political structures,'' Helms said.

Gorbachev wants the West to ''finance his new system of control for Eastern Europe, and even to rebuild the Soviet economy, which he has destroyed by building the world's biggest and most dangerous military machine,'' Helms charged.

Helms urged several conditions for cooperation with the Soviets, including refusal to supply any public or private money until Gorbachev ''dismantles every illegal strategic nuclear system he has deployed, and reduces the others to reasonable levels.''

Also, no money should go to Eastern Europe unless President Bush ''can guarantee that it will not fall into the hands of communists.''

ST. PAUL, MN (MARCH 2) UPI - American polar adventurer Will Steger, five companions from other nations and their sled dogs, who fought blinding blizzards and numbing cold for seven months and nearly 4,000 miles, were poised Friday to become the first to cross Antarctica without mechanized transportation.

The support staff in St. Paul reported Friday afternoon that one of the team members, Keizo Funatsu, 32, of Japan, was found after spending 11 hours out in a storm that whipped winds up to 73 mph.

The staff said Funatsu had gone out to check the dogs during the night. After he failed to return after two hours, a search was started. It took nine hours to find Funatsu, who was reported in ''good health,'' the staff said. No further details were unavailable.

While the winds died down to about 30 mph Friday, temperatures were about minus 20 degrees Fahrenheit. The weather, which has played havoc with the international team's efforts since it embarked on its $11 million expedition from Seal Nunataks on July 27, 1989, was still giving trouble.

''The latest is that as far as we know they are still about 16 miles away from Mirnyy,'' said spokeswoman Cynthia Mueller. ''As far as we know, they are hoping they still are going to be arriving in Mirnyy sometime tomorrow (Saturday).''

The team had been tent-bound for two days and it was not known if they would try to travel during the night. The team must cross a field of crevasses, which often can be hidden beneath of sheath of snow.

Also still up in the air, Mueller said, was whether the adventurers, their dogs, support staff and journalists covering the historic finish at a Soviet research station would be able to get off the continent Monday as hoped.

''It's still very sketchy,'' Mueller said. ''We're not sure what is going to happen with that. The plan was for a Soviet ship to remove the dogs, team members, journalists and their equipment March 5. However, they are having some difficulty getting this vessel into Mirnyy because there's been an incredible ice buildup. But now the ice is clearing and miraculously some kind of path has opened into Mirnyy.''

They were going to try to use small boats to ferry the entourage out to the Soviet ship and leave Monday.

Meanwhile, Sir Vivian Fuchs, the explorer who made the first Antarctic crossing in 1957-58 using snowmobiles, sent a congratualtory message to the team.

''Congratulations on your extraordinary achievement,'' Fuchs wrote. ''Will follow you in my heart for the last 16 miles of the journey.''

Steger, 45, of Ely, Minn., has made a career out of such adventures, having also sledded to the North Pole and climbed two 19,000-foot-plus peaks in the Peruvian Andes.

Besides Steber and Funatsu, the other members of the team are Dr. Jean-Louis Etienne, 42, of France, Victor Bovarsky, 38, of the Soviet Union, Qin Dahe, 42, of China, and Geoff Somers, 39, of Great Britain.

The team, which hopes to draw worldwide attention to environmental concerns about Antartica, has been traveling with a three-member film crew and a still photographer on Feb. 23.

Exactly how many miles the expedition has covered is not clear. Mueller said estimates based on satellite markings had placed it at more than 3,600 miles, but the team said its mileage counter attached to a sled pegged it at closer to 3,900 miles.

Two of the team's 30 dogs died in Cuba on the way to the start and a third dog died on the trail in October when the expedition was forced to hole up for several weeks because of winds that howled up to 100 mph and temperatures down to 45 degrees below zero.

On Dec. 11, 1989, the team became the first to reach the South Pole by dogsled since Roald Amundsen discovered it on Dec. 14, 1911.

When weather was good and the terrain accommodating, they managed to average as much as 27 miles a day.

Their food supply was supplemented by aerial drops and caches placed along their route. They kept in touch with their base periodically by radio and satellite transmissions.

(MARCH 2) UPI - 21 top officers of the Romanian secret police appeared in court today to face murder charges. The officers bowed their shaved heads as they were charged with ordering security forces to fire on protesters in the city of Timisoara in Decemmber and destroying evidence by smuggling 40 corpses to the capital to be incinerated.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir rejected a threat by Secretary of State Baker to hold up U-S loans for housing Soviet emigres until Israel freezes settlement activity in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. Shamir's statement today comes as he prepares to respond to a U-S compromise proposal to advance the peace process stalled over whether to admit certain Palestinians to talks.

Los Angeles police say a section of Sunset Boulevard has collapsed... creating a four-foot-deep hole that devoured five cars... including a Cadillac and a Mercedes... before it was roped off this morning. NO one has been seriously hurt. Police suspect that the four-foot-deep hole... which is four feet by six feet wide... may have been caused by a storm drain, but they are NOT sure.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - State Attorney General John Van de Kamp, announcing plans to sue Farmers Insurance Group, accused California's second-largest auto insurer Friday of making "a mockery" of Proposition 103 by refusing discount rates to good drivers.

"We will seek an injunction to force Farmers to end its policy of refusing to sell insurance at good rates to good drivers," Van de Kamp said. He said that Farmers "could face very substantial penalties" and that the state will seek civil penalties of $2,500 "for each and every good driver illegally refused insurance" by the company.

Van de Kamp said Farmers has violated provisions of the state's Proposition 103 initiative by refusing to offer and sell a good-driver discount policy to hundreds of thousands of motorists with no more than one moving violation in the past three years.

"Farmers has attempted to make a mockery of the law, either by shunting some good-driver applicants into a subsidiary called Mid-Century Insurance which does offer new policies but only at outrageous prices, or by outright refusing to insure them at all," Van de Kamp said.

The lawsuit, to be filed Friday in Los Angeles Superior Court, also alleges Farmers illegally used the "absence of prior automobile insurance coverage as a criterion for determining eligibility for a good-driver discount policy or generally for automobile rates, premiums or insurability."

Van de Kamp accused the insurance industry of giving consumers "nothing but a song and dance" while employing "fleets of lawyers to tie up

He said the suit is based on statements by insurance agents who claim companies, including Farmers, have threatened to stop doing business with them if they comply with the rules of Proposition 103.

Insurance companies are required to sell insurance at 20 percent below regular rates to all good drivers, but Van de Kamp said Farmers has continued to use "old underwriting rules which discriminate against hundreds of thousands" of good drivers.

In 1988, Farmers collected more than $1 billion in auto insurance premiums while Mid-Century collected nearly $400 million on the same premiums, the suit said.

Among other auto insurers, State Farm and Allstate recently have also been accused of mishandling good drivers. Van de Kamp, while declining to name the firms, said his office is "investigating similar practices by other large companies."

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (MARCH 2) UPI - Transition talks between President-elect Violeta Chamorro's victorious coalition and the Sandinista government were recessed Friday. A coalition source said the discussions were ''paralyzed'' but would continue.

Chamorro arranged to meet with members of the diplomatic corps during the afternoon to air claims that the Sandinistas were trying to obstruct the transition process.

''There are no talks (with the Sandinistas) planned for today,'' said Miriam Arguello, a top member of Chamorro's National Opposition Union. Backed by the 14-party coalition, known by its Spanish initials as UNO, Chamorro won a stunning victory over Sandinista President Daniel Ortega in Sunday's election.

Chamorro's top advisor, Antonio Lacayo, and Defense Minister Humberto

Ortega, President Ortega's brother, held three days of talks beginning Tuesday.

The Sandinista National Liberation Front, or FSLN, characterized the discussions as "negotiations" of conditions for the transfer of power, but UNO spokesmen said the Sandinistas were only interested in dealing with protocol.

Speaking on condition of anonymity, another UNO source said the transition talks between the Sandinista Front and UNO officials were ''paralyzed'' but would continue.

''The Sandinistas want to maintain the structure of the army and the Interior Ministry,'' said the UNO source, who is close to the talks. The source did not say when talks would resume.

Lacayo, who heads the UNO transition team, was scheduled to meet with the coalition's political council Saturday to brief members on the discussions with the Sandinistas, the source said.

Ivan Salvador Madriz, a member of the UNO political council, said Chamorro arranged to meet Friday afternoon with foreign diplomats based in Managua to tell them of alleged intimidation and attacks against UNO supporters by the defeated Sandinistas.

''There are a lot of complaints about aggression, intimidation and jailings,'' Madriz said.

Chamorro out-polled Ortega by 55 percent to 41 percent in the election and is to be sworn in as president April 25 for a six-year term.

A Latin American diplomat in Managua predicted the two-month transition would be marked by tough back-and-forth negotiations on issues like control of the military and the future of other Sandinista-controlled institutions.

Ortega has struck a conciliatory tone in recent speeches and said Thursday he would turn over power on inauguration day, ''regardless of conditions in the country.'' Chamorro has also stated her determination to take over the reins of the government without pre-set conditions by the Sandinistas.

Despite peaceful elections, the UNO has accused the Sandinistas of creating an atmosphere for violence by inciting Sandinista Front followers and handing out weapons to some party militants.

"Some leaders of the FSLN have declared their willingness to rebel against the sovereign will of the people,'' UNO said in a communique issued late Thursday. ''As a result of these declarations, Sandinista mobs have undertaken physical aggression, threats and all kinds of intimidation against the Nicaragua people.''

UNO also accused the FSLN of ''distributing combat arms among fanatics of the Sandinista Front.'' One source with extensive contacts in the Sandinista Front said ''a few crazies'' were refusing to accept Ortega's loss and laying plans for a possible return to armed struggle.

''There are all sorts of reactions (to the election loss),'' the source said. ''If you want, you can put your name on a list and someone will bring weapons around to your house.''

But the source said ''only 20 or 30 people'' were involved in such plans, and discounted the likelihood of violence.

Pro-Sandinista newspapers, meanwhile, have carried stories claiming UNO supporters had intimidated Sandinista party members. Still, conditions across Nicaragua have been generally calm following Chamorro's surprise victory, which will bring an end to more than a decade of Sandinista rule.

Chamorro, in an interview aired Friday on ABC's ''Good Morning America'' program, said she believes the transition will be orderly.

''Yes, of course,'' Chamorro said, adding that Ortega committed himself to the election three years ago under an agreement orchestrated by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias. ''He (Ortega) cannot go back because that would be betraying the presidents of Central America.''

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - An appeals court Friday returned to Dr. Elizabeth Morgan the passport it seized 3 1/2 years ago, allowing her to travel to New Zealand and participate in an international custody battle for her young daughter.

The District of Columbia Court of Appeals turned over the passport to Morgan a day after a lower court judge, who jailed Morgan for more than two years on contempt of court, ruled that releasing the passport ''is in the best interests of the minor child.''

Morgan, a plastic surgeon, was not available for comment. Her attorney, Adrian Roe, declined comment.

But Morgan had said earlier that if she won back her passport she would immediately travel to Christchurch, New Zealand, for the next phase of a custody battle for her daughter Hilary, 7.

Hilary's father, Eric Foretich, 47, a northern Virginia oral surgeon, is already in New Zealand trying to gain custody of the child.

Morgan, 42, claims Foretich sexually abused Hilary, a contention he has repeatedly denied. The two were legally separated before Hilary's birth.

The appeals court rejected a motion from Foretich's attorney that would have made the return of Morgan's passport contingent on her agreement to reliniquish it upon her return from New Zealand. Foretich's attorney, Elaine Mittleman, said she feared Morgan would take Hilary and flee to a third country.

Morgan surrendered her passport to the appeals court in August 1986, when she went to jail for three days rather than obey a court order giving Foretich limited visitation of their only child.

The custody and visitation battle escalated, and in August 1987, Morgan sent Hilary into hiding with her parents, defying D.C. Superior Court Judge Herbert Dixon's order that she again allow Foretich visitation rights.

When Morgan refused to reveal the child's whereabouts, Dixon found her in contempt of court. She spent 25 months in the D.C. Jail.

Morgan was released last September, but only after Congress passed a special law limiting such contempt of court jailings in the District of Columbia. President Bush signed the bill.

Hilary surfaced last week in New Zealand, where she has been living in Christchurch since 1988 with her maternal grandparents, William and Antonia Morgan.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Japan Fleet Service-Singapore signed a contract with the European consortium Airbus Industrie for the purchase of four wide-body A300-600R aircraft, Airbus said Friday.

Airbus said that deliveries will be completed by 1995 at the latest and that engine selection has yet to be made. Terms of the contract, signed Feb. 28, were not revealed. The list price for the aircraft is $77 million each.

The only major airplane leasing company in Singapore, Japan Fleet Service-Singapore is involved in aircraft financing and in aviation-related leasing operations, notably of spares and engines.

Jean Pierson, managing director for Toulouse, France-based Airbus, said the contract was the consortium's first transaction with an aircraft leasing company in Asia.

UPLAND, CA (MARCH 2) UPI - A sharp aftershock hit Southern California Friday, inflicting damage to already weakened structures, triggering rock slides along mountain roads and jolting residents still recovering from an earthquake earlier in the week.

No injuries were reported.

''It was a very sharp jolt,'' said Mike Matlock, Upland assistant city manager. ''It didn't last more than four or five seconds but it was just a good-sized thump.''

The aftershock, measuring 4.7 on the Richter scale, hit at 9:26 a.m. and was centered in the same area as Wednesday's 5.5 shaker, on the Los Angeles-San Bernardino county line, scientists said.

Although far weaker than the main quake - which hit hardest in Upland, Pomona, La Verne and Claremont - the aftershock was felt across hundreds of square miles.

Matlock said officials received about half a dozen calls about additional minor property damage in Upland. ''Things that may have been cracked in the earlier earthquake now may have completely lost whatever structural integrity they had left,'' he said.

Most of the new damage involved toppled chimneys and cracks in floors and walls.

Sheryll Schroeder, the Upland city clerk, said, ''It was pretty bad, a pretty strong one. Some windows and the floor definitely shook.''

In La Verne, Jeff Allred, the assistant city manager, said officials there received reports of minor damage to six homes. In addition, a ruptured gas line was reported at a dormitory at the University of La Verne.

Concerned over the potential for already weakened structures to collapse, officials cordoned off the First Baptist Church in Pomona.

''It was like a bad vibration,'' an Upland man said, describing the aftershock. Others said it felt like a ''short jolt.''

Meanwhile, in an updated estimate of losses from Wednesday's quake, the state Office of Emergency Services said Friday the shaker, felt over 13,000 square miles, inflicted $12.7 million in damage.

In all, 101 homes and 176 businesses reported damage. Pomona reported the heaviest losses, with damage there set at $7 million. At least 34 people were injured in the main quake.

Friday's aftershock was the 35th to hit since Wednesday. The strongest of the aftershocks hit at 7:24 p.m. Wednesday, measuring 4.8 on the open-ended Richter scale.

Friday's aftershock loosened rocks above mountain roads, triggering more slides that forced the closure to all but residents of all roads leading to Mount Baldy Village in San Bernardino County, about 45 miles east of downtown Los Angeles.

Lucille Jones, a seismologist at the Caltech Laboratory in Pasadena, said aftershocks as significant as Friday's were expected to follow the main temblor.

Wednesday's temblor was the strongest quake in California since a 7.1 jolt ravaged the San Francisco Bay Area on Oct. 17, 1989, killing 67 people, injuring nearly 3,000 and causing $7 billion damage. A 7.1 quake is 100 times stronger than a 5.1 temblor, so Wednesday's quake was far less powerful than the Bay Area quake.

ANALYSIS BY JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Just when Terry O'Kelley thought nothing more could go wrong - something did.

O'Kelley's story is told in ''A Son's Promise,'' a real heart-tugger starring Rick Schroder that airs on ABC Monday, Mar. 5, 9-11 p.m. Eastern time.

It is one of those stories that no scriptwriter would dare make up, except it happens to be based on a true story.

Terry, at 15 the oldest of seven brothers living in rural Georgia, promises his dying mother that he will keep the family together.

He does, despite a drunken father, the death of his grandfather, the loss of their home by fire, the loss of his job through misunderstanding and the loss through another fire of what seemed like a possible good source of income raising chickens.

This is a story of rural America, of old-fashioned values and of incredible adversity overcome. What makes it credible is another fine performance by Schroder, that cute little kid from ''The Champ'' and ''Silver Spoons'' who achieved real grown-up status in ''Lonesome Dove.''

''I had a wonderful time doing 'A Son's Promise,''' Schroder said in an interview, his hand wrapped in bandages from a run-in with a sliding glass door that required 80 stitches and five hours of surgery.

''It was shot in Georgia and I really liked my younger brothers a lot. All those kids in the show are from Georgia. The show was cast down there and they're real southerners. Some of them had never done anything professional before in their lives except maybe a commercial or two.''

Schroder, who comes from New York City and admitted ''it was a definite stretch for me to play a chicken farmer in Georgia,'' met the real Terry O'Kelley during filming.

''He's a real nice guy. He's now about 22. The family doesn't all live together now - they're older, of course - but they still love each other and they're still a family.

''I have a great family myself so I know if you don't have a family you've got nothing. Nothing else can take the place of the family - not girlfriends or a career.''

For those who still associate Schroder with ''Silver Spoons'' and sitcoms, he said, ''I don't like doing movies that are meaningless or unrealistic. I like things with a lot of reality to them. I'm a pretty serious kind of person myself. Things affect me. Some people are numb to life and don't feel anything, don't care.

''I do my best work in serious stuff. Doing a sitcom for five years was nice but I started out doing drama when I was a little kid.''

He called ''Lonesome Dove'' one of the happiest, best things he had done.

''For 18 weeks I got to play a cowboy (he had to learn to ride a horse for the part), I got to work with Robert Duvall and it helped my career a lot. It helped me make the transition from playing a young kid to a 19-year-old guy.''

All those horses have had their effect - Schroder has his eye on a 15,000 cattle ranch outside Grand Junction, Colo.

''I fell in love with it,'' he said. ''It's at 9,000 feet elevation; it has forests and trees and lakes on it. I want to buy it, build a house on it and move there. I mean, you make money, what are you going to do - keep it in the bank and die with it?

''I'd keep cattle on it and you can also ranch for wildlife - deer, black beer - you increase the population on the ranch and you get certain tax benefits. The ranch also has mountain lions and turkeys.

''I did a movie in Australia with William Holden when I was a little guy and ever since then I've been into woods. He would tell me great stories about Africa - he was a great outdoorsman - and he got me interested.

'Lonesome Dove' really finished it off. Riding a horse through the woods is the best feeling in the world.''

The lovely rural world of Prince Edward Island as it was in Victorian times blossoms on television again in the Disney Channel's first original hour-long dramatic series, ''Avonlea.''

Like Disney's previous miniseries, ''Ann of Green Gables'' and ''Anne of Avonlea,'' the new series is based on the stories of L. M. Montgomery. ''Avonlea'' premieres Monday, Mar. 5 at 8 p.m. Eastern time.

The premise is as old as ''Heidi,'' but still effective. A rich little girl accustomed to only the best is forced by circumstances - in this case her widowed father's bankruptcy and possible imprisonment - to leave her luxurious Montreal home and take up residence with her late mother's relatives at Avonlea on Prince Edward Island in southeast Canada.

The doll-like frail-looking but spunky girl, Sara (Sarah Polley), in the first episode loses her pampering nanny but eventually wins over her stiff prissy Aunt Hetty, a spinster schoolteacher who has always disapproved of Sara's father.

Sara must adjust to rural life, and to her two sometimes hostile cousins and another outcast who is boarding at Avonlea.

''Avonlea'' makes delightful watching - the kind of children's entertainment that the parents can sneak in and watch, too.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - State authorities sued Charles Keating Jr., who owned Lincoln Savings and Loan, and officers of its former parent company, American Continental Corp., for alleged investment fraud, officials said Friday.

"We are alleging that Mr. Keating, American Continental and others masterminded a carefully concealed campaign of fraud and deceit that directly resulted in the defrauding of many thousands of California investors," Commissioner Christine Bender of the state Corporations Department, said at a news conference.

But Kevin Roddy, an attorney in class-action suits filed by the state Corporations Department on behalf of the 23,000 bondholders, called the agency's actions "too little and too late." He said Bender is partially at fault for the losses because she allowed the bonds to be sold despite receiving an internal memo advising against the sale. "The Department of Corporations is filing this suit for political reasons and public relations reasons," Roddy said.

The state's suit, filed in Superior Court late Thursday, seeks an injunction and demands restitution for American Continental bondholders who purchased $200 million in now-worthless bonds sold through Lincoln offices, mostly in Southern California between late 1987 and early 1989. American Continental, which is based in Phoenix, and two of its officers, Judy Wischer and Andrew F. Liggett, were also named as defendants.

Bender also said the filings were forwarded to the district attorneys in Los Angeles and Orange counties for possible criminal prosecution. Los Angeles County District Attorney Ira Reiner announced Thursday that he would convene a special grand jury to investigate Lincoln's collapse.

Lincoln's failure is also being investigated by House and Senate committees and the Justice Department. Bender has denied accusations that her decision to permit the bond sale was influenced by lobbying by her predecessor, Franklin Tom.

The suit claims that the purchasers were falsely assured that the bonds were federally insured when they were not. It also said the defendants knowingly made false filings to the state agency.

Federal regulators seized the Irvine, Calif., savings and loan last April, one day after American Continental filed for bankruptcy protection. The Lincoln bailout is expected to cost taxpayers $2 billion, the costliest savings and loan bailout ever.

Federal regulators have already sued Keating and other executives on fraud and racketeering charges. Class-action suits have been filed in state and federal courts, with the state suit also naming the state of California as a defendant because of the Corporation Department's approval of the bond sales.

Bill McDonald, the department's director of enforcement, said the bond buyers were often pressured into switching investments from insured Certificates of Deposits to the uninsured bonds. The transactions sometimes occurred under banners saying "insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp."

He said the scheme was undetectable because it was directed only toward regular customers. "When a stranger walked in, everything was done by the book," McDonald said. "The regular customers were the ones who got fleeced."

Bender said the suit represents the first investment fraud-related charges leveled by any government agency against Keating. She also said that despite American Continental's bankruptcy filing, she is hopeful that the action will lead to recovery.

"Mr. Keating and the other individual defendants are not in bankruptcy and in any event, debts incurred by fraud are not dischargeable in bankruptcy " she said. However, Keating's attorneys have said he has no money.

WALLA WALLA, WA (MARCH 2) UPI - A convict whose lawsuit forced Washington state to fix ''intolerable'' prison toilets was found dead in his cell - by the plumber who had come to repair the commode.

Washington State Penitentiary spokesman Richard Bauer confirmed Friday that Jerry Snow, 48, died of a heart attack Feb. 25.

''He was found by one of the plumbers and an inmate helper,'' Bauer said. ''It's unfortunate this happened. Mr. Snow was getting close to his release.''

Snow entered prison in 1979 to serve a 14-year sentence from Grays Harbor County for burglary and for being a habitual criminal.

In 1988 he was the lead inmate in a lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Spokane over the toilets in the prison's medium-security modules, which opened in 1985.

U.S. District Judge Justin Quackenbush found that due to the lack of ''backwater'' valves, waste from prisoners' toilets could flow unimpeded into the toilets of inmates in different cells.

The waste would stay until the toilet was flushed or for up to eight hours while prisoners were away from their cells, creating objectionable odors because the toilets have no covers, the judge said.

''I find that the toilet condition is an intolerable, offensive condition '' Quackenbush ruled last May.

He ordered the prison to repair 200 toilets at a cost of $12,000, a job Bauer said would be finished this month.

SANTA ANA, CA (MARCH 2) UPI - Invoking the images of John Wayne and the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, President Bush answered Latin American complaints about U.S. drug policy Friday by urging ''relentless offense'' to curb the American appetite for illegal narcotics.

Mingling images from the entertainment and sports worlds in a land of Hollywood fantasy and the Los Angeles Rams, Bush shifted the focus of a recent anti-drug campaign from the supply side to demand.

"In order to win, America's war on drugs must be a total war," he told several thousand teenagers at an outdoor rally, "waged from the boardroom to the classroom, from the White House to your house. No element from our society is immune.''

Bush began his day's events by thanking television executives in Los Angeles for channeling the creative energies of the powerful medium against drug abuse.

After several days of emphasizing the need for tougher laws and stiffer criminal penalties to catch drug dealers and jail them, Bush underscored the need to reduce American demand, which Andean leaders at the recent drug summit in Colombia cited as a major U.S. contribution to the global drug crisis.

Exorting high schools students at the Santa Ana Bowl to emulate the late he-man movie actor and long-time Orange County resident John Wayne by standing up for what is right, Bush said, ''We have seen some scattered but hopeful new signs of progress against the horror of drugs.''

That glimmer of optimism came on the heels of a State Department report Thursday that global production and use of drugs rose last year, despite the highly publicized U.S. anti-drug efforts.

Underlining the problem, Bush said, ''Make no mistake. Drug abuse in this county is still too far widespread. There is far too much suffering, far too many wasted lives.

''But we're going to beat drugs the same way the Rams beat many of their opponents - relentless offense, a defense that refuses to give up a single yard to the opposition or a single child to these merchants of death.''

The president also pushed his drug message at a breakfast for the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, where he told an audience of producers, writers and actors, ''Thank goodness the days when popular culture glorified and glamorized drug use are fading. Public opinion is turning around.''

Bush lauded efforts by the oft-criticized medium to focus on ''some of our nation's most serious problems, whether it's hunger or homelessness or drug abuse.''

In a departure from complaints heard from Washington about the "glorification" of the drug culture in films and television, Bush welcomed the introduction of anti-drug themes into regular programming, particularly shows for children.

Endorsing an upcoming academy production titled ''Cartoon All-Stars to the Rescue,'' Bush said, ''Never before in cartoon history have Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck worked with the Teenage Ninja Turtles, the Muppets, the Smurfs and all the other stars of the cartoon world.''

Apparently not all that familiar with the Saturday morning children's favorite, Bush hesitated at the reference to the Teenage Mutant Ninjas, which he pronounced ''neen-jahs.''

During eight years in the White House, ex-actor Ronald Reagan was heard to complain at times about the moral and social themes seen in today's output from Hollywood. Bush, however, said the toll drug use has exacted from the sports and entertainment industries - ''too many of the men and women we look up to, too many of our heroes pulled down, destroyed by drugs'' - has led to a turnaround in attitudes.

''That's why I'm here this morning,'' he said. ''To thank you, the leaders in the television industry, for enlisting the power of TV as a force for positive change. Each of you is a point of light with the unique ability to inform, to change attitudes, to catalyze public action in our fight against drug abuse.''

Two hecklers were ejected from the ballroom after trying to shout Bush down with criticism of what one of the two, John Fall, called his ''lack of leadership on AIDS.''

''All he talks about is drugs and Eastern Europe while people are dying,'' Fall told reporters as he was led away by off-duty police officers.

Bush took the interruption in stride, saying, ''one of the reasons that we've increased federal help to an all-time high for AIDS is to try to help people who are concerned and we will continue to try to help people who are concerned about that.''

''This guy's intervention doesn't bother me one little bit,'' he said to applause, ''and I'm glad we live in a country where we can all speak up, even if it takes advantage of the hospitality of you all.''

SCOTTSDALE, AZ (MARCH 2) UPI - More than 9,000 Greyhound employees walked off the job Friday, leaving passengers across the country stranded in the midst of a bitter contract dispute between drivers and the nation's largest intercity bus line.

Failing to resolve their differences at the bargaining table and with no new talks scheduled, picket lines went up at 12:05 a.m. MST outside Greyhound terminals across the country.

Within hours, three strike-related incidents were reported, including one in Chicago, where a Molotov cocktail planted under a car next to a Greyhound maintenance building was defused. Police said the device was most likely planted as a ''scare tactic.''

In Cleveland, a picket claimed he was struck by a departing bus driven by a strike-breaker. A similar incident was reported in Houston. There were no serious injuries.

The strike centered on pay and job security issues. Contact talks started four months ago.

The Amalgamated Transit Union said, ''The company's actions amount to a tragic breach of faith with ... workers who have accepted significant wage and benefit reductions since 1983. Profits are up and ridership is up, and the reward for Greyhound workers has been a slap in the face.''

The union called on Greyhound to return to the bargaining table to negotiate ''in good faith.''

In a statement from company headquarters in Dallas, P. Anthony Lannie, executive vice president and Greyhound's chief negotiator, said some buses were running Friday with either replacement drivers or employees who are not honoring picket lines.

''The company will operate as many schedules as possible today and through the weekend,'' Lannie said, adding Greyhound expects to have the entire system back in operation before the end of March.

The company said it did not have figures on how many buses were running Friday, or how many employees were working.

Jeffrey Nelson, a spokesman for the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, charged that workers were forced to strike because Greyhound ''has refused to bargain in good faith.''

In lieu of an agreement, the company imposed its latest contract offer, one made Jan. 10, at 12:01 a.m., he said.

Lannie said Greyhound made ''extraordinary efforts'' to resolve the dispute. He said he ''negotiated directly'' with Edward M. Strait, president of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, ''for most of the week.''

''Although he and I reached agreement on solutions, he was unable to sell those solutions to members of the council,'' Lannie asserted.

The strike caught travelers by surprise.

In the Jackson, Miss., Greyhound terminal, Flossie Westbrook, 66, said she was not told of the strike threat Thursday morning when she purchased a ticket to Chicago.

''I'm shocked, but where else is there for me to go?'' she said. ''I've got to get to Chicago.''

She said she contacted Amtrak, but was told all seats to Chicago were booked.

At New York's Port Authority Bus Terminal, the biggest and busiest in the nation, dozens of workers wore picket signs that read, ''We can't live on a dog's wage,'' and ''Stop Greyhound union busting.''

''It's modern-day slavery,'' said Percy Williams, who earns about $18,000 a year as a Greyhound mechanic. ''Other company's bus cleaners make almost as much as me.''

In addition to 6,300 drivers, the contract that expired at midnight Thursday covered 1,475 maintenance workers and 1,660 office workers in telephone information centers in Omaha, Neb., and Charlotte, N.C., and the accounting center in West Des Moines, Iowa.

Greyhound serves about 9,500 communities in the 48 contiguous states and says it provides the only public transportation to about 9,000 communities that have no airlines or rail passenger service.

Lannie said the company offered a package worth $14.1 million, or 6.9 percent, in the first year. ''That is an excellent offer from a company that lost almost $20 million over the last three years and is far above the average of company-union negotiated settlements of the last two years '' he said.

OSLO, NORWAY (MARCH 2) UPI - Prime Minister Jan Syse asked the Soviet Union Friday to clarify reports it is considering opening a nuclear weapons test site on the Soviet Arctic island of Novaya Zemlya.

Norwegian media reported Friday that a decision was in the offing to move underground testing from the Semipalatinsk site in Soviet Kazakhstan to Novaya Zemlya, 370 miles northeast of the Norwegian town of Vardo across the Barents Sea.

The Norwegian reports said that local inhabitants in Semipalatinsk had protested the presence of the site in Kazakhstan and demanded testing be moved elsewhere.

''Moving such tests so close to Norway would be extremely regrettable,'' Syse said in a statement released Friday.

''My government has asked the Soviet authorities for a further explanation. If the reports are correct, I will ask the Soviet government to reverse its decision,'' the short statement said.

Norway shares a 120-mile Arctic border with the Soviet Union, overlooking the vast Soviet military complex on the Kola peninsula.

LUSAKA, ZAMBIA (MARCH 2) UPI - The African National Congress named recently freed black leader Nelson Mandela its deputy president and announced Friday that the movement would set up its headquarters in South Africa for the first time in 30 years ''without delay.''

The ANC also announced it would contact the white government in Pretoria immediately to fix a date for the first talks between the two sides on obstacles still standing in the way of formal negotiations on a new constitution to end the country's racial conflict.

The announcements came at the end of a two-day meeting of the ANC's 35-member National Executive Committee and effectively put Mandela at the head of Africa's oldest liberation movement to guide it through a period he has described as ''the most crucial in our history.''

Mandela's appointment as deputy president sidesteps the issue of addressing the 23-year presidency of Oliver Tambo, 72, who suffered a stroke last year and remains under care in a Stockholm clinic.

Mandela, whose friendship with Tambo dates back to the early 1940s, is expected to visit the ailing ANC president in Sweden before the end of his 17-day foreign tour.

''My future role will be determined by the National Executive,'' Mandela said, deflecting questions about whether he would lead the ANC delegation in talks with the government of President Frederik de Klerk. ''All I can say is that I am prepared to serve in any role the National Executive instructs me to fulfill.''

Two other ANC officials sentenced in 1964 to life imprisonment with Mandela, Govan Mbeki and former ANC Secretary-General Walter Sisulu, also were restored seats on the NEC, according to a statement read after the meeting by ANC acting President Alfred Nzo. Mbeki was freed from a South Africa prison in 1987 and Sisulu last October.

Following de Klerk's bold racial reform initiatives announced Feb. 2, including Mandela's release and the lifting of a 30-year ban on the ANC, the ANC's administrative body announced it would hold a national congress in South Africa on Dec. 16 - the 29th anniversary of the launching of the organization's military wing, Umkhonto we Sizwe (Spear of the Nation).

Among the decisions made at the two-day NEC meeting was that ''the headquarters office of the ANC will be opened in Johannesburg without delay'' as well as other regional offices.

The statement did not address the fate of the ANC's headquarters in exile in Lusaka or the orderly return of exiles without fear of prosecution.

Mandela also refused to set a timetable for the preliminary talks with de Klerk or the establishment of the headquarters in South Africa. But he said ''we might act sooner than the 16th of December.''

No changes emerged publicly on the ANC's position that a suspension of the armed struggle hangs on negotiations with Pretoria on a formal cease-fire. The executive committee also reaffirmed its demand that de Klerk ''move without delay'' to meet all pre-conditions for talks, including the release of all political prisoners and the lifting of a 44-month-old state of emergency.

''The unbanning of the ANC is a significant move, but the release of one prisoner when there are 3,000 is not such a significant development,'' Mandela said.

''I have pointed out on several occasions before that the question is not one of armed struggle but of apartheid. It is not a question of sanctions but of racial repression,'' he said. ''If the government gives us the opportunity, we will move away from conflict and confrontation, but it is for the government to decide.''

Mandela was expected to appear Saturday at a public rally in Lusaka, gripped by an outbreak of cholera that killed more than 80 people last month. Government authorities lifted a ban on public gatherings to allow Zambians to attend the rally and other festivities for the South African black leader, who arrived Tuesday on his first foreign trip since his Feb. 11 release.

From Lusaka, Mandela travels to Harare, Zimbabwe, where he will be the guest of honor at a rally Sunday at which President Robert Mugabe launches his ruling party's campaign for the March 28-29 national elections. Mandela also will travel during his mission to ANC training camps in Tanzania.

During his trip to Lusaka, Mandela also received a rare invitation from a U.S. congressional delegation to address a joint session of Congress, an honor usually reserved for heads of state. But Mandela said Friday his future international travel plans following this initial tour would be decided by the NEC.

(MARCH 2) UPI - The U-S Embassy in Egypt says a retired accountant from Houston travelling with his wife was among the 19 people killed in the fire at the Heliopolis Sheraton. Three other Americans are missing. 70 people... including two Americans... were injured in the blaze, which started when oven sparks set off a tent in the hotel lobby.

Indian authorities have imposed a curfew on the restless Kashmir Valley, fearing more violence on today's Islamic holiday after weekly noon prayers. Indian troops yesterday killed 60 pro-independence protesters. Three legislators from the Moslem region staged a protest against the killings by sitting on the lawns of parliament today.

A U-S congressional delegation is in South Africa for talks with President Frederick de Klerk and opposition officials. Congressman William Gray- a Pennsylvania Democrat- says the group hopes to gain a better understanding of recent changes in South Africa. The group also will meet with Foreign Minister Roelef ''Pik'' Botha as well as black union officials.

Nicaragua's president-elect Violeta Chamorro told T-V interviewers that she expects an orderly transition. Government and opposition leaders held transition talks yesterday at several sites in Managua. But Sandinista-controlled labor unions are threatening to demand an immediate wage increase from the president-elect.

A small earthquake shook southern Illinois early today, but there are NO reports of damage or injuries. State and local officials say the quake was centered about 10 miles south of Vandalia and was felt at least 60 miles away in St. Louis. The quake measured three-point-four on the open-ended Richter Scale.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - The Federal Reserve and the West German central bank sold dollars Friday in New York and other foreign exchange markets in a partially successful bid to halt the U.S. currency's recent advance.

Foreign exchange market players said the Banque de France, the French central bank, was also selling dollars during the New York session in an apparently coordinated bid to halt the unit's upward movement.

Traders said the Deutsche Bundesbank was selling dollars in Europe during the New York trading hours at just under 1.72 marks. Such intervention can halt a currency's rise by underbidding, breaking market momentum.

In late New York trading the dollar was quoted at 1.7145 German marks, down from 1.7185 Thursday. The U.S. currency was changing hands at 150.15 Japanese yen, ahead from 149.75 the previous day.

"It took the market a little by surprise," said Societe Generale dealer Ken Sheldon. "The Bundesbank had been out of the picture for a while." The last known Bundesbank intervention came early in January, when it said it sold $50 million to stop the dollar at a level of 1.73 marks.

Senior dealer Janice Bellone of the Bayerische Hypotheken-und Wechsel Bank in New York said the Bundesbank's intervention pushed the dollar down below 1.71 marks but it later recovered some ground.

Dollar bullishness is likely to continue, she said. "I think we're in a bid (dollar-buying) trend now," she said, adding that many participants expect the dollar to rise as high as 1.7350 deutsche marks.

Bellone said the yen is still under pressure, putting the Bank of Japan in a quandary. Analysts say it must raise its key interest rate to prop up the yen, but this could aggravate financial market volatility. "It makes it quite a difficult situation for the Bank of Japan to knock this lower," she said. "They're between a rock and a hard place."

Sheldon said traders would be taking cautious positions for the weekend, when President Bush meets with Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu for talks with bilateral trade and other economic issues on the agenda. "Some statements might be coming out" of the meeting which could have impact on currency exchange rates, he said.

In New York the British pound slipped to $1.6490 from $1.6635. Other dollar rates: 1.5075 Swiss francs, off from 1.5090; 5.7910 French francs, down from 5.8045; and 1,264.25 Italian lire, off from 1,267.50.

In Europe the dollar closed mostly higher against the main currencies, ending in Frankfurt at 1.71 German marks against 1.7015 Thursday. But it declined in Zurich to 1.4985 Swiss francs compared with 1.5005.

The U.S. currency continued its upward trend in Paris, Brussels and Milan to 5.8012 French francs against 5.7835, 35.66 Belgian francs compared with 35.47 and 1,266 Italian lire against 1,263.30. In London the pound finished lower at $1.6530 against $1.6655.

Republic National Bank in New York closed cash gold at $403.50 an ounce, down from $406.75 Thursday. The New York Commodity Exchange settled gold at $403 an ounce, off from $406.20. In Zurich gold closed lower at $405 an ounce against $407.50. London gold slid to $403.50 an ounce from $407.75.

Republic closed cash silver at $5.135 an ounce, down from $5.165. Comex spot silver declined to $5.126 an ounce from $5.154. Zurich silver fell to $5.15 an ounce from $5.20. London silver rose to $5.13 an ounce from $5.10.

SPANAWAY, WA (MARCH 2) UPI - A set of outdoor aluminum bleachers filled with hundreds of students evacuated from their junior high school because of a bomb threat collapsed Friday, injuring at least 15 pupils.

Emergency dispatch officials said at least 11 students from Cedar Crest Junior High School were transported to hospitals, but none of the injuries appeared to be major or life-threatening.

At least four more students with minor injuries were taken away by parents called to the school after incident.

Jay Rifle, assistant superintendent for the Bethel School District, confirmed the school had received a bomb threat about 10:30 a.m. The approximately 650 students at the school south of Tacoma were evacuated by police and fire units.

Officials said some of the students were led by teachers across the football field outside, where they apparently climbed up on the aluminum bleachers for a better view of the evacuation process.

''Everybody started rocking the bleachers, and they started falling down '' said one student who escaped without serious injury by jumping off the top of the bleachers.

A spokesman at St. Joseph Hospital in Tacoma said less than an hour after the accident that two students had been brought in.

''One had a back injury,'' he said, ''the other was a knee. Neither were seriously hurt.''

Some students were treated at the scene with ice packs applied to their necks and shoulders.

A school staff member who asked not to be identified indicated the aluminum bleachers lining the football field frequently were the target of vandals. A few students indicated they had been told previously not to walk or sit on the bleachers because of possible safety problems. There was no immediate confirmation of that by school administrators.

The state fire marshal's office said an investigation would be conducted.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - Former Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Dr. Charles Edwards was named Friday to lead a special government committee to review the FDA, an agency currently embroiled in a scandal over generic drugs.

In announcing Edwards' appointment, Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan called the FDA ''one of the most important guardians of American public health,'' and said it is ''crucially important that FDA carry out its missions in the most effective manner possible.''

Edwards served as FDA commissioner from 1969 through 1973 and was assistant secretary for health from 1973 through 1975. He is currently president of the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif.

For the past year, the FDA has battled a bribery scandal that has led to the convictions of three former FDA employees, three generic drug executives and two drug companies. Investigations by federal authorities have also turned up fraudulent substitution of brand-name products for generic drugs to win FDA approval, altered testing data and inaccurate production records on the part of generic drug makers.

After six years at the helm of FDA, Dr. Frank Young left the agency in December to take an assistant health secretary's post at HHS. A replacement has not yet been named. Young's last year was filled with controversy over the regulation of generic drugs, the availability of AIDS treatments, the cyanide scare with Chilean grapes and consumer fears over the chemical Alar in apples.

''The advisory committee will look at FDA issues across the board, including priorities for the future. Dr. Edwards is uniquely qualified to lead this review,'' Sullivan said.

The 12 other members of the advisory committee will be named shortly, HHS said. The committee will have a year to deliver its findings and recommendations.

In its charter, the committee is directed to review:

-The mission of the FDA.

-The agency's ability to balance speedy availability of products with their safety and efficacy.

-Staffing and financial resources.

ABIDJAN, IVORY COAST (MARCH 2) UPI - The government moved Friday to close Abidjan University, sending in troops to clear the campus in the face of growing student unrest over President Felix Houphouet-Boigny's fiscal austerity policies.

The government blamed student violence for the decision to close the university, which comes after two weeks of student protests seeking improved living conditions and political reforms.

Civil servants walked off the job Friday to protest looming pay cuts of up to 40 percent. Police charged government employees who took part in street protests, firing tear gas at demonstrators and beating Odile Coulibaly, secretary to the director of the Agriculture Department, witnesses said.

Hundreds of high school students for the first time boycotted classes and joined university students in protesting the pay cuts, designed to finance the Ivory Coast's foreign debt. The cuts in private and public sector wages are due to take effect Monday.

Demands for a multi-party state have been increasing and observers of the Ivory Coast say there are signs suggesting that student demands for a better standard of living will spread to the working poor at a time when austerity measures are about to force living standards down further.

A meeting of the West African country's ruling National Council to finalize details of the pay cuts has been postponed twice because of widespread protests from labor unions.

Leaders of the Ivory Coast General Workers' Union told Houphouet-Boigny that introducing between 11 percent and 40 percent in salary cuts, as is planned, will have a severe impact throughout the workforce.

The money is to be deducted in the form of a tax that will be used to pay off the nation's foreign debt, which currently stands at $14 billion.

The decision to cut pay rather than lay off large numbers of workers is regarded by the government of the West African nation as the policy least likely to cause severe hardship.

Student riots, which have erupted at the university every day for almost two weeks, began in protest of the expense of university living accommodation and the price of meal tickets.

Officials of the university teachers' union voiced public support for the students and labor unions and said in a statement they fear that wage cuts will increase the unrest of the past two weeks.

Unions have insisted on extensive discussions with the 84-year-old president before the scale of the pay cuts is finalized.

Prices for Ivory Coast cocoa have risen sharply because of the unrest. The March export price in Abidjan has risen from $1,056 per ton two weeks ago to $1,188 per ton.

Increased buying was sparked by fears of supplies being interrupted as protests and strikes continued.

It is believed that much of the current Ivory Coast crop, which was to have been around 800,000 tons, has already been sold.

SEOUL, SOUTH KOREA (MARCH 2) UPI - North Korea is believed to have dug more than 20 underground invasion tunnels along the border separating South and North Korea, Defense Minister Lee Sang-hoon said Friday.

Testifying before the National Assembly, Lee said the United States and South Korea would continue joint efforts to discover such tunnels and that any new find will be announced without delay.

''Since we found three North Korean underground tunnels between 1974 and 1978, operations have been under way jointly with the U.S. side to detect more invasion tunnels and our judgment is that there are more than 20 of them,'' Lee said.

''We take a prudent stand and do not disclose our findings until there is a firm confirmation, because announcements in an unconfirmed situation could cost the government credibility among the people and offer an excuse for North Korea to balk at efforts for improved inter-Korea relations,'' he said.

Lee said the United States and South Korea will maintain solid joint defense arrangements until North Korea gives up its ambition for a communist takeover of the South.

''Despite the trend for openness in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, the situation around the Korean peninsula remains unchanged,'' Lee said.

(MARCH 2) UPI - The fall in gasoline prices that totaled 4.5 cents a gallon this week skidded to a stop Friday as traders took profits on short positions previously taken in anticipation of the drop.

Traders "cashed in and covered up," said Chris Bray of Paine Webber Inc., Andover, Mass. "It was a sympathy rally - in sympathy to the market being crushed the last few days," the analyst said.

After the week's decline, "apparently the market decided it wanted to do some short-covering," agreed Randall Rothenberg of Dean Witter Reynolds International Energy Futures Group in New York.

April delivery unleaded gasoline, which became the spot-month contract Thursday gained 0.66 cent on the New York Mercantile Exchange to 56.47 cents a gallon, 4.5 cents lower than a week ago. On the New York Harbor cash market unleaded gasoline edged up 0.20 cent to 54.25 cents a gallon, 3.85 cents less than last Friday.

The price-depressing week was marked by a continuing rise in gasoline inventories in surveys reported by the American Petroleum Institute and the Energy Department in Washington.

New York Harbor terminal operators also were trying to get rid of higher vapor pressure gasoline of 13.5 pounds per square inch and replace it with lower nine psi product in preparation for a May 1 anti-pollution deadline set by the governors of northeastern states.

West Texas Intermediate, the standard-setting U.S. crude, climbed 18 cents to $21.35 a barrel on the Merc, seven cents less than a week ago. It hit a low on the day of $21.07 a barrel, penetrating for the first time in weeks the previous low of $21.15 a barrel.

The new low indicates some weakness in the crude market with demand falling as refiners begin slowing down output for their maintenance "turnarounds" from heating to gasoline production, Rothenberg said. WTI gained 20 cents on the U.S. Gulf Coast cash market to $21.35 a barrel, a gain on the week of 15 cents.

On the Merc, heating oil for April delivery climbed 1.24 cents to 55.87 cents a gallon, also on short-covering. It lost, however, 1.4 cents on the week. On the New York Harbor spot market, heating oil rose 1.50 cents to 56.75 cents a gallon, down 1.55 cents on the week.

On the European spot market, Britain's North Sea Brent crude lost two cents to $19.23 a barrel, up 28 cents on the week. The United Arab Emirates' Dubai light - the key OPEC crude from the Middle East shipped mainly to the Far East - slipped three cents to $16.10 a barrel, a gain of five cents over last Friday.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - President Bush's plan to send people to Mars appears reasonable, but NASA must address crucial concerns about the health risks of long-term space travel, the National Research Council said Friday.

In a report requested by Vice President Dan Quayle, chairman of the National Space Council, a panel of 14 scientific experts said Bush's overall goal of establishing a moon base and then sending a manned mission to Mars seems basically sound.

But the earliest timing of the project being considered by NASA - setting up the lunar base in 2001 and reaching Mars by 2011 - looks overly optimisitic, the committee said.

''It depends upon accelerating completion of Space Station Freedom. For technical and cost reasons, such accleration seems unlikely,'' the panel said in its 63-page report.

The scientists added that present design of the space station may not meet all requirements of the moon-Mars intiative.

In commissioning the report, the Space Council asked whether cost estimates for the far-reaching mission were reasonable. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's initial study of the plan, released in November, estimated efforts to explore Mars by way of a lunar outpost would cost between $470 billion and $540 billion in 1991 dollars.

''It should be possible to return people to the moon and establish a human presence on Mars, at a measured pace, at a relative rate of annual expenditure that is less than that of the peak Apollo commitment,'' the research council committee said.

Experts calculated a moon-Mars initiative, from 1991 through 2025, could be achieved with additional annual funding amounting to ''a few tenths of 1 percent of the gross national product.'' That would be about $12 billion to $24 billion annually or $350 billion to $700 billion overall in 1991 dollars - an estimate rougly in line with NASA projections.

Currently, 0.1 percent of the GNP equals about $6 billion, and NASA has an annual budget of about $12 billion.

NASA Administrator Adm. Richard Truly said Friday he was pleased that the panel found NASA's early assessment of the moon-Mars exploration ''accurate and appropriate.'' The Space Council also liked the report because the findings coincide with recommendations the council has made to the president concerning the Mars project, administration sources said.

NASA must address some major needs before any work is started on designing equipment for the moon-Mars missions, the committee emphasized. Those needs include developing a new generation of vehicles fueled by all-liquid propellant to replace the space shuttle and studying the possibility of using nuclear power to propel spacecraft.

Human health in space was another major worry.

''Significant unanswered scientific questions exist concerning the feasibility of long-duration human spaceflight in a low-gravity environment,'' the report said.

Although the human body rebounds ''remarkably well'' from the absence of gravity during short-term flights, the panel said it has not been demonstrated that people returning from long-term missions can adjust rapidly to gravity without suffering ''serious physiological consequences.''

NASA should try to develop ''artificial gravity'' to simulate Earth-like conditions in the spacecraft, as well as other countermeasures like special space suits, exercises or medication to miminize ''unacceptable risks to the crew,'' the panel said.

''The capability to send humans into space, maintain them in a physical condition that permits them to work productively and return them to Earth in good health is central to the Human Exploration Initiative,'' the report said.

The National Research Council is an arm of the National Academy of Sciences, an independent body chartered by Congress to answer scientific questions for the federal government.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - Texas investor Harold Simmons, in another move to keep Lockheed Corp. on the defensive, has asked the defense contractor's board to let shareholders vote on whether the company shold restrict golden-parachute agreements, documents disclosed Friday.

Simmons' group, which includes Houston chemical company NL Industries, asked Lockheed Chairman Daniel Tellep in a letter to present the proposal at the company's annual meeting March 29. The letter was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Lockheed's severance pay contracts call for special payments to five top executives in the event of a takeover. The size of the payment is linked to term of service.

Simmons's group, which holds nearly 19 percent of Lockheed stock, has formed a slate of 15 candidates to replace the current board.

Earlier in the week, Simmons and NL said they would ask shareholders to vote on an anti-greenmail resolution in their proxy that would bar payment of a premium for shares held less than two years.

Lockheed responded by offering to submit tougher resolution that would bar any greenmail. Companies pay greenmail when they pay a hostile suitor a premium price for their shares in order to avoid a takeover.

Lockheed stock fell 62.5 cents Friday to $35.75 a share on the New York Stock Exchange.

CAIRO, EGYPT (MARCH 2) UPI - Four Americans were among the 19 tourists killed in a fire that swept through a luxury hotel outside Cairo, U.S. officials said Friday.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Marcella Wahba identified one dead American as Robert D. Cresap, 67, a retired accountant from Houston. The State Department in Washington said three other bodies recovered in the rubble of the burned hotel were identified as Americans, but their names had not yet been released.

Meanwhile, Tourism Minister Fuad Sultan said Friday that the Heliopolis Sheraton, which caught fire early Thursday and became an ashen grave for 19 tourists, did not have an advanced fire detector, and he urged all Egyptian hotels to install the systems.

Also among the dead were one Briton, eight French, an elderly Finnish couple and one Greek air stewardess, authorities said. The nationalities of the remaining dead had not yet been determined.

Seventy people were injured in the blaze, many with broken bones from jumping out windows to escape flames.

Wahba said Cresap's wife, Helen, was suffering from smoke inhalation but was in stable condition in a local hospital.

Two other Americans, Robert Touhey, from Battle Creek, Mich., and Patrick Nielson, whose home town was not immediately known, were among the injured she said. Nielson, a Lufthansa West German airlines employee, was airlifted to West Germany for treatment.

''Existing hotels in Egypt are not equipped with advanced early warning systems against fire,'' Sultan said in a statement.

''A decision has been finally taken to make it necessary for this vitally important equipment to be installed in the modern tourist establishments currently under construction,'' Sultan said.

He did not say if existing hotels would be required to improve their fire detector and sprinkler systems after the Sheraton blaze, but Cairo's municipal authority said older hotels should at the very least start removing tents and other fire risks from their premises.

Thursday's blaze started when sparks from an oven, used to make Arabic dishes for guests, set fire to an Arabic-style display tent pitched in the hotel lobby, witnesses said.

Survivors of Thursday's fire said the 650-room, six-story Sheraton, situated some 10 miles north of Cairo, had no sprinkler system against fire and no audible alarm.

A British diplomat did not give the name of the Briton who died, but state-run Athens Radio, monitored in Cairo, named the dead Greek woman as Eleni Grigoriou, 30, a stewardess with Olympic Airways.

Sultan said Egyptian authorities had done everything possible to help the injured and survivors, and Cairo newspapers said fire department officials would enforce stricter fire regulations.

One luxury hotel in the Egyptian capital said it would like to improve its fire-fighting equipment.

''We don't have water sprinklers in the ceiling, but we have smoke and heat detectors,'' said Mohsin Riyad, sales manager of the Cairo Meridien.

Riyad said the Meridien hotel would like to import more advanced fire-fighting equipment, but this would mean having to go through difficult bureaucratic customs procedures.

''You have to obtain permission from Egyptian customs to bring this advanced equipment in, and this is difficult,'' he said. ''And the equipment is expensive.''

MOSCOW (MARCH 2) UPI - Miners went on strike at four mines in the Ukrainian coal heartland Friday to push their demands that the region's entire Communist Party leadership resign, Soviet television said.

Colliers at four of 22 mines in Donetsk, a city of 1.1 million people in the middle of the giant Donbass coal field, walked off the job two days before Ukrainian parliamentary elections in which Communists face new competition under Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's ''perestroika'' reforms.

''Work was suspended at the Oktyabrskaya, Kalinin, Gorky and Zasyadko mines,'' the ''Vremya'' evening news program said. ''At a number of (other) mines, it was decided to stop loading fuel for consumers, but they are carrying on all other kinds of work.''

The official Tass news agency said two mines, Oktyabrskaya and Zasyadko, experienced only partial strikes.

Tass quoted Nikolai Volynko, co-chairman of the Donetsk strike committee, as saying that all mines in the city had been hit by a six-hour work stoppage.

The Donetsk colliers staged a brief warning strike Thursday when Radio Moscow's Interfax news service said seven miners were on the third day of a hunger strike in front of the party headquarters.

Strikes that shut down Donbass and most other coal regions of the Soviet Union last summer were tied mainly to economic demands for better working and living conditions, but the Ukrainian miners entered a new phase of political activism with the fresh strikes.

Volynko said Thursday that the strikes were ignited by a recent television expose on a special store with $9.6 million worth of imported boots for party and government leaders.

Most miners supported the demands that party leaders quit, but many opposed the resumption of the summer coal strikes that cost the crippled Soviet economy hundreds of million of rubles in lost production, news reports said.

''Though workers at many enterprises spoke in favor of the regional party committee's resignation, many believe that they must not stop working because that would deal another blow to the country's injured economy,'' the television said.

Many of the regional party chiefs have held their posts for only a few months, following an overhaul of the leadership in the wake of the coal strikes in July, and do not feel they are responsible for past mismanagement, it said.

The party brass in Donbass, the richest coal region of the world's No. 1 coal producer, has refused even to consider quitting until a regional party conference scheduled for April 6-7, Interfax said.

Calls for the party leaders to resign were voiced at a large pro-democracy rally in Donetsk on Sunday, one of dozens across the Soviet Union on a national day of protest.

Grass-roots rebellions in recent weeks have forced regional and local party chiefs to resign in a number of areas of the dominant Russian and Ukrainian republics.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - A bipartisan congressional commission approved a plan Friday to provide all Americans with access to health care, but did not say where the government would find the $66 billion a year needed for its share of the program.

The long-awaited Pepper Commission plan would use a mixture of public and private insurance to provide universal coverage, as well as set up a federal program to cover costs of long-term care, such as in a nursing home.

The commission, made up of 12 key health care figures in Congress and three members appointed by President Reagan, estimated the proposals eventually would cost the federal government $66.2 billion a year.

Employers would pay another $20 billion, commission officials told a news conference.

Other proposals approved by the commission would convert Medicaid into a totally federal program and reform the insurance business so people with ''pre-existing conditions'' would not be denied coverage.

The commission voted 8-7 in favor of a five-year plan to provide universal access by building on the existing system of employer-provided coverage. A proposal for totally government health insurance was defeated 9-6.

The commission's insurance plan would require employers to provide coverage or pay into a public insurance pool. Small businesses would receive subsidies, and a public program would be established for people not covered by employers.

Services would include primary and preventive care as well as hospital and doctor bills. But beneficiaries would share the costs, with subsidies for the poor and limits on out-of-pocket spending.

By an 11-4 vote, the panel agreed to recommend three months of free nursing home care for all Americans, create a federal system to pay for home care and provide aid so that no one is impoverished by being in a nursing home.

The plans were approved over the opposition of White House officials and the protests of some commission members that panel had not figured out how to pay for coverage - one of its original goals.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said it was hoped the money could be raised through a progressive tax - one that increases or decreases with the wealth of the payer. He said the value of the report was that it gives the American people a sense of how much a national health plan costs.

''Nobody has ever done this before,'' he said. ''Nobody has ever talked about the costs.''

But Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., called the program a ''hoax,'' saying, ''Where the commission fails is to figure out a fair way to pay for the plan.''

''It's dead,'' he said. ''It's a dodo bird.''

''The problem is a shortage of money, not a shortage of ideas on how to spend the money,'' added Rep. Willis Gradison, R-Ohio, who estimated the progam would add $750 to the bill of each taxpaying individual or family.

''All it's going to do is raise a lot of false hopes and dash them,'' he said.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who is not a commission member, said he was ''seriously disappointed'' with the panel, adding, ''When the question of financing arose, it ducked.''

The American Medical Association and two dozen other medical groups praised the basics of the panel's program, as did advocates for the elderly.

Business groups applauded the call for insurance reform but expressed disappointment the commission would require them to provide benefits.

''Mandates will cause job loss,'' said Karen Berg Brigham, manager of health care policy for the Chamber of Commerce.

The plan already had drawn opposition from administration officials, including budget director Richard Darman, who privately lobbied against it.

Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan called the proposals ''commendable'' but said the panel's failure to be more specific about money shows how difficult it will be to provide universal access to care.

"Now we need to move toward agreement...on how best to bring about the improvements we all desire and how to share the costs of that system," he said.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., accused the administration of trying to ''sidetrack'' the commission, and Stark said a solution would not be possible until there is White House leadership on the issue.

The panel was established by Congress in 1988 to study two issues - the up to 37 million Americans without insurance and the 9 million who need expensive long-term care.

NEW DELHI, INDIA (MARCH 2) UPI - Former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's party claimed Friday it will be able to retain power after state-level elections in one of its last major political strongholds but appeared to be headed for a humiliating defeat in another important state.

Gandhi's Congress (I) Party announced it will stake a claim to forming a government in the western India state of Maharashtra, which includes the nation's financial capital of Bombay. Congress (I) will seek to govern the state with backing in the state assembly from 13 independents, without whose support it would have been swept from government in Tuesday's elections.

Between 60 percent and 70 percent of more than 215 million registered voters in India cast ballots in a total of 1,610 state-level races marred by violence that claimed at least 97 lives, 80 of them in Bihar, the state where Congress (I) appeared to be losing Friday.

With all but one of 288 assembly races declared in Maharashtra, the party captured 142 seats, three short of the 145 required for an absolute majority, according to returns from the state, India's most industrially developed.

The Congress (I) success in Maharashtra was offset by returns from Bihar in eastern India, the nation's poorest and second most-populous state. The ruling Congress (I) administration there faced ouster by a four-party alliance led by the Janata Dal, returns showed.

With the outcome of 207 of 323 races determined, the Janata Dal-led combine had won 119 assembly seats - 43 short of an absolute majority - and Congress (I) only 42. The BJP was running third with 22.

Barring a dramatic reversal in Bihar, the Congress (I) Party would be totally swept from power for the first time in a decade from the six states comprising its traditional northern India Hindi-speaking stronghold.

Congress (I) suffered devastating defeats Tuesday in assembly elections held in the ''Hindi Belt'' states of Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh and Himachal Pradesh, and was already out of office in Haryana and Uttar Pradesh.

The six states are home to the bulk of India's 820 million people, making them the most politically powerful region in the world's largest democracy.

The loss of northern India will severely cripple Congress (I), the political juggernaut that sustained the Nehru-Gandhi dynasty in control of the national government for nearly four decades.

Some experts predict that the rout could spark a rebellion against Gandhi's leadership of the party, which lost control of the national government to the National Front in parliamentary elections last November.

The party would be left in of control seven states, only three of them - Maharashtra, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh - of political significance.

(MARCH 2) UPI - East meets West in the California desert where President Bush will host Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu in two days of talks on trade issues. The summit in Palm Beach, California, will be the second in six months between the two leaders. U-S officials say Bush hopes to press Kaifu into concessions designed to head off an economic confrontation between the two nations over the U-S trade imbalance with Japan.

The index of leading economic indicators held steady in January. The December index figure was revised to show a six-tenths of one percent increase. But Mellon Bank economist Norman Robertson warned against putting too much weight on the data. The Pittsburgh economist says the latest government reports have been giving mixed signals, but he says the economy is on a positive growth track. The index predicts future economic activity based on 11 factors.

GREENSBORO, N.C. (MARCH 4) UPI - A federal jury Friday ordered Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. of Kentucky to pay Liggett Group Inc., a North Carolina competitor, $148.8 million in an antitrust case involving generic cigarettes.

The jury, following nearly eight months of testimony, ruled in favor of the Liggett Group Inc. of Durham, which claimed the Louisville firm tried to put it out of business.

The Durham company claimed that Brown & Williamson was involved in unfair marketing practices after Liggett & Myers introduced consumer-oriented, low-price generic cigarettes in 1980.

''Brown & Williamson purposefully (was) setting out to bring about the demise of Liggett & Myers because Liggett's low-price cigarettes were interfering with Brown & Williamson's high profits on their branded cigarettes,'' said Josiah Murray, a Liggett attorney.

A Liggett official praised the verdict of $148.8 million as a signal to the tobacco industry to compete fairly.

''The jury fully evaluated the case on the merits and ruled in favor of fair competition. The message is clear: unfair competitive conduct in the marketplace is contrary to American law,'' said K.v.R. Dey, Liggett's president.

''Whenever we see this type of anticompetitive behavior targeted against Liggett, we will take appropriate action.''

B&W was disappointed with the jury's verdict on Liggett's antitrust claim, B&W spokesman Patrick Stone said, adding, ''We are confident this verdict will be overturned upon further judicial review.''

''Brown & Williamson is pleased with the jury's verdict on Liggett's trademark claim,'' said Stone. However, he said, ''The jury rejected Liggett's contention that Brown & Williamson unfairly competed with Liggett because of the packaging and closure seal Brown & Williamson used with its low-priced cigarettes.''

The case, which exposed the inner workings of the tobacco industry from cost of manufacturing to the pricing of cigarettes, was brought by Liggett in 1984. Liggett attorneys argued that Brown & Williamson entered the generic value-price category of cigarettes illegally by implementing a discriminatory and predatory pricing scheme. The company copied Liggett's trademark and prevented Liggett from expanding its sales of low-price cigarettes, Murray said.

Liggett was wholly owned by Grand Metropolitan PLC when the lawsuit began. In 1986, Liggett was sold to a group of private investors. A year later, Liggett Group went public.

Stone said competition increased significantly as a result of B&W's entry in the price-value segment. The antitrust laws encourage price cutting and vigorous competition, he said, ''and that is exactly what happened.''

Brown & Williamson is convinced that ''the verdict will not be upheld in the face of overwhelming evidence that competition was not in any way injured by Brown & Williamson's sale of low-priced cigarettes,'' Stone said.

''Liggett's contention that it was a struggling company about to go out of business is baseless, given its size and resources,'' he said.

Market shares of cigarette makers last year showed Philip Morris of Ricmond, Va., at the top with 41.9 percent, B&W, third, with 11.4 percent and Liggett & Myers sixth with 3.2 percent of the market.

Stone said Brown & Williamson's low-price cigarettes accounted for about one-third of its business last year.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - The Food and Drug Administration moved Friday to widen the authorized uses of the AIDS-fighting drug AZT to include thousands of AIDS-infected people who have yet to get sick.

The FDA decision follows the recommendation of an advisory panel, which about a month ago called for AZT's labeling be expanded to include certain people infected with the AIDS-causing human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV but who show no signs of the deadly disease.

''The change in labeling means that better treatment can now be offered to thousands of people at earlier stages of infection with the AIDS virus before their health deteriorates critically,'' Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan said in a statement Friday.

The FDA approval officially endorses a practice started by many AIDS doctors in August after the National Institutes of Health reported research findings that showed AZT could slow disease progression in some HIV-infected people with no AIDS symptoms.

AIDS activists have said FDA authorization of earlier AZT use is vital to making insurance companies and state-run Medicaid programs pick up the bill for such treatment. Many public and private insurers refuse to pay for off-label uses of drugs.

Assistant Health Secretary James Mason said Friday's action ''underscores the government's commitment to widen the treatment options available against AIDS.'' Based on results of an AZT trial involving 1,350 HIV-infected people without AIDS symptoms, NIH officials estimated about 600,000 of the 1 million to 1.5 million Americans infected with HIV might benefit from AZT.

It can take a decade or longer from the time a person is infected with HIV until he shows signs of AIDS.

Under the new AZT labeling, patients can appear healthy, but they must have slightly depressed immune systems - less than 500 T-4 cells per cubic millimeter of blood - before they are started on the often-toxic drug.

AZT or zidovudine, made by Burroughs-Wellcome Co. of Research Triangle Park, N.C., is the only government-approved drug to directly attack the AIDS virus. Although it is not a cure for AIDS, it has been shown to prolong the lives of people with AIDS and advanced-AIDS-related complex.

In NIH's two-year study, no survival benefit was shown in giving AZT to HIV-infected people without symptoms. However, people receiving AZT developed AIDS or the related complex at about half the rate of a similar group who did not get the drug.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 2) UPI - NASA announced Friday a two-part contract with TRW Inc. to develop a high-tech mirror for a space-based observatory.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said it has completed negotiations with TRW on a cost-plus-award contract to provide high resolution mirror optics technology and a mirror development program for the space-based Advanced X-Ray Astrophysics Facility.

The AXAF will be put into orbit in 1997 by a space shuttle. It is the third in NASA's series of space-based Great Observatories following the Hubble Space Telescope and the Gamma Ray Observatory.

TRW's work on the $161.9 million first phase of the two-part contract will be performed in its plant at Redondo Beach, Calif. Major subcontractors are Hughes Danbury Optical Systems, Danbury, Conn., and Kodak Federal Systems Division, Rochester, N.Y.

The second part of the program is an option to be awarded upon successful completion of the first part and is subject to new start authority and congressional approval. It will include development of the total AXAF observatory through launch and one year of on-orbit operation, NASA said.

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - Exxon Corp. Friday suspended all tanker and barge operations at its massive Bayway Refinery and Bayonne Terminal pending an investigation into the second major oil spill in three months in a busy waterway separating New York and New Jersey.

Operations at the Bayway Refinery will be sharply curtailed pending the outcome of the evaluation, Exxon president Lee Raymond said.

The move to suspend operations was made to assure consumers of Exxon's intent to be environmentally responsible, Raymond said.

Ships Friday were moving into New Jersey's major ports as cleanup crews finished mopping up a Thursday night spill of 3,500 gallons of heavy oil into the Arthur Kill waterway at the Bayway refinery. Most of the oil was contained by booms.

A spill in January sent a half-million gallons of light heating oil into the kill, which separates Staten Island from northeastern New Jersey.

Capt. Robert North, Coast Guard captain of the Port of New York, inspected the affected area from the air Friday morning and reported there was ''no free-floating oil seen anywhere in the harbor or in Arthur Kill and Kill Van Kull.''

The kills, narrow natural waterways into New Jersey's main ports of Port Elizabeth and Port Newark, were polluted with nearly 35,000 gallons of heavy oil spilled at two Exxon facilities since Wednesday.

Exxon President Raymond said alternate supply arrangements are being made so that service will not be interrupted while tanker operations are suspended.

''The evaluation will be made by a team of operating, technical and environmental experts which is now being assembled and which will begin work as soon as possible,'' Raymond said.

Crews worked through the night to rid Arthur Kill of the Thursday night spill, which was blamed on a ruptured hose that spewed crude oil being unloaded into a Texaco Barge moored at the Linden, N. J., refinery.

The spill came while workers in the nearby Kill van Kull waterway were cleaning 30,000 gallons of heavy, No. 6 industrial oil that leaked Wednesday from a barge at an Exxon dock, forcing Coast Guard officials to close the busy channel temporarily.

The channel was reopened Thursday but vessels were warned to proceed slowly enough not to produce wake.

Another spill at the Exxon Bayway refinery in January dumped 567,000 gallons of light heating oil into the Arthur Kill when an Exxon pipeline connecting Bayonne and Linden, N.J., ruptured. That spill polluted more than 5 miles of shoreline including wildfowl refuges and took a month to clean up.

Although no visible oil was left in the water from Wednesday's Kill van Kull spill, tar balls collected along the Staten Island shoreline and some beaches on the New Jersey side of the waterway, the Coast Guard said.

Six skimmer boats and a number of vacuum trucks were sucking up goo left on Atlantic beaches at Sandy Hook, N.J., off New York Harbor.

Coney Island on the Brooklyn side of the harbor also was being watched by Coast Guard inspectors for oil pollution.

The Kill van Kull waterway was closed Wednesday while workers tried to contain the thick industrial fuel oil, which leaked from a 12-by-6-inch hole in a ''damaged'' tank on the barge tied up at an Exxon dock.

Al Appleton, commissioner of New York City's Department of Environmental Protection commissioner, said in addition to the recent spills in the New Jersey port area since Jan. 1, there had been 20 small spills of 50 to 100 gallons each. He said this reflected ''a continuing pattern of failure on the part of the petroleum industry.''

NEW YORK (MARCH 2) UPI - The Dow industrials this week posted their first five-day winning streak since November and for the first time since July the market rang up a week of broad-based gains each day.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 24.77 Friday to close at 2660.36 for a gain of 96.17 points on the week, or about 3.8 percent.

Among the broader market averages, the New York Stock Exchange composite index added 5.62 points to close the week at 184.97. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index jumped 11.39 to 335.54.

Advances pounded declines 1,278-615 among the 2,160 issues traded this week. Big Board volume totaled 808,235,330 shares, compared with 639,359,410 a week earlier and 778,544,950 a year ago.

The last five-day string of gains for the Dow industrials came Nov. 21-28 in the sessions surrounding the Thanksgiving holiday. The last Monday-to-Friday period in which the market overall posted an advance each day was July 10-14.

After recording four straight losing sessions last week upon returning from the Presidents' Day holiday, the market bounced back with a vengeance this week as investors continued to shrug off the Tokyo market's declines and applauded some surprisingly strong economic reports.

Analysts pointed to the upward revision reported Wednesday in the rate of U.S. economic growth in the fourth quarter to 0.9 percent from 0.5 percent. The rate of growth in the gross national product had been expected to be revised downward, so while the growth rate itself was slow, the upward revision was a pleasant surprise for the market.

Further brightening the economic outlook was a report Thursday from the nation's purchasing managers, who reported that their index of economic activity, a widely watched indicator, rose at a rate of 48.3 percent in February, compared with 45.2 percent in January. The index was expected to be unchanged, so that report also boosted investors' confidence in the economy, analysts said.

Finally, the government reported Friday that the index of leading indicators was unchanged in January, which analysts said gave further credence to the prediction that the economy's current slowdown would culminate in a ''soft landing'' - moderate growth along with a gradual easing of inflation and interest rate pressures.

''The best of all possible worlds for the financial markets is a no boom, no bust scenario, '' said Hugh Johnson, chief economist at First Albany Corp. in Albany, N.Y. ''And based on today's data, that's the most rational conclusion. Apparently investors reached that same conclusion,'' he said.

Meanwhile, Tokyo stocks plummeted more than 1,500 points Monday, rebounded Tuesday and Wednesday, sold off again Thursday but bounced back Friday. But Wall Street gained regardless of what the Tokyo market did, analysts said, mainly because investors saw the turmoil there as the result of internal developments in Japan.

''What is happening in Japan is unique to Japan because of inflation problems there and the fact that their market hasn't had a major correction in five years,'' said Monte Gordon, research director of Dreyfus Corp.

Johnson said the turmoil in Tokyo has prompted a ''flight to safety'' of sorts and sent a lot of capital flowing back into the markets in the United States, which in turn has caused the dollar to rise.

''And as that capital is repatriated, the rise in the dollar will subtly put pressure on the Federal Reserve to add liquidity to the financial system (to restrain its rise),'' Johnson said. ''And adding liquidity to the financial system is always positive for stocks,'' he said.

On the trading floor this week, Texas Utilities was the most active NYSE issue, up 1/8 to 34 3/4.

Philip Morris followed, off 5/8 to 36 7/8. Pfizer was third, jumping 5 1/2 to 61 3/4.

Among the other blue chips, AT&T rose 2 1/4 to 40 3/8, IBM climbed 2 1/4 to 104 7/8, American Express added 1 3/8 to 29 3/8, and General Electric gained 1 7/8 to 62 3/8. Exxon fell 3/8 to 46 3/4 after being indicted on charges related to the Valdez oil spill last year. General Motors jumped 2 5/8 to 46, benefiting from the improved economic outlook. Union Carbide lost 1 1/4 to 22 after saying it would not undertake a restructuring.

Elsewhere, Philadelphia Electric lost 2 1/4 to 17 3/4 after being granted only a small part of a requested rate hike and Xtra jumped 6 5/8 to 31 3/8 after putting itself in play for a possible takeover.

On the American Stock Exchange, the Amex Market Value index rose 5.02 to close Friday at 356.12. Advances led declines 420-359 among the 997 issues traded.

Amex volume totaled 85,838,325 shares, compared with 58,764,385 traded a week earlier and 46,914,145 traded in the same week a year ago.

Echo Bay Mines led the Amex actives, up 3/8 to 16 7/8.

The National Association of Securities Dealers index jumped 11.50 to end the week at 431.02.

SAN FRANCISCO (MARCH 2) UPI - World demand for lumber will remain strong in 1990, but the ability of American mills to satisfy it may be hampered by increasing environmental restrictions on harvests from national forests, the president of the Western Wood Products Association said Friday.

Although exports will be up, Western lumber producers are expected to supply 1.4 percent less finished product overall in 1990 than they did in 1989, predicted H.A. Roberts, WWPA president.

Roberts said WWPA forecasts for mills in the 12-state Western woods producing region call for the manufacture of 22.59 billion board feet of lumber,including redwood, this year, making it the third highest production year ever for the West.

But he cautioned this estimate came ''with one big proviso - that's if logs are available.''

Lumber required for new home construction ''is almost at a wash with repair and remodeling,'' Roberts said. He said the remodeling market took 15.2 billion board feet last year and is expected to require 15.0 billion this year.

International interest in processed U.S. lumber - most of which comes from Western mills - is expected to continue high.

''Export markets were good in 1989, showing an increase of 3.3 percent over 1988,'' Roberts said. ''We expect exports will again show about a 3.0 percent increase this year over the 1989 levels.''

NEW YORK (MARCH 4) UPI - The U.S. Treasuries market ended a choppy week on a positive note by rising on a government report that sales of new single-family homes declined a sharp 7.1 percent in January, which was taken as further evidence that the American economy still is gearing down.

But that late rally merely evened off losses posted Thursday when Treasury prices declined on a collection of economic reports portraying an economy stronger than expectations. In particular, a survey of purchasing managers showed manufacturing up slightly in February.

Bond markets tend to turn down on such news, which suggests the Federal Reserve will not be moved to lower interest rates to stimulate the economy which would make bond yields relatively more attractive.

Bond prices had fallen Wednesday after the government made an upward revision of 1989 fourth-quarter gross national product data.

Trading Friday left the benchmark 30-year bond, the 8 1/2 of 2020, at 99 16/32 for a yield of 8.55 percent, compared with 99 11/32 and 8.56 percent one week earlier. That represented a gain for the week of about 1/4 point, or $2.50 for each $1,000 face value.

Uncertainty now governs the market, said Fred Sturm, a vice president and senior economist with Fuji Securities. ''Market participants are moving from event to event trying to find direction,'' he said.

Investors won't have much to trade on either until the end of next week, when the Labor Department puts out job figures. ''Between now and this time next week I fear we're going to be sitting in a vacuum,'' he said, adding that even then the unemployment data probably will be ambiguous.

But Sturm predicted bonds would pick up in the spring, when the economy could be ''drifting back to the two-fisted weakness it exhibited last autumn'' and the Fed might be forced to lower short-term rates. He said manufacturing is ''fraying around the edges'' and ''the consumer is crawling.''

A similar scenario was offered by Raymond Stone of Stone & McCarthy Research Associates Inc., a Princeton, N.J., credit market consulting firm.

Bond performance is closely tied to U.S. inflation and the economy. So prices could firm as inflation is controlled and economic statistics, presently a mixed bag, weigh heavier ''on the negative side of the ledger.''

Meanwhile, concern is easing about the effect on U.S. Treasuries of inflation and rising interest rates in West Germany and Japan.

Smith Barney analysts said the U.S. market ''continues to markedly outperform its counterparts as inflation pressures sensed worldwide'' have little impact in the United States. Japanese investors are likely to increase investments in Treasuries and other dollar-priced instruments after April 1, when Japan's new fiscal year begins, they said.

Stone said that despite rising Japanese interest rates, Tokyo managers could still find certain U.S. Treasury bonds more attractive than domestic instruments once inflation is taken into account. And German rates could come down as inflation fears there ease, he said.

Commented Sturm: ''Once the dust settles, what you're going to be left with is a Japan facing rising inflation, Germany in economic and political turmoil, and a United States that has a modest but stable growth rate and a very stable political environment.''

Ten-year Treasury notes closed at 99 23/32 to yield 8.54 percent, unchanged from a week earlier. Five-year Treasury notes closed at 99 29/32 for a yield of 8.51 percent, against 100 4/32 and 8.46 percent.

Three-year Treasury notes closed at 99 21/32 to yield 8.51 percent, compared with 99 26/32 and 8.45 percent one week before. Two-year notes closed at 100 1/32 to yield 8.48 percent, against 100 5/32 and 8.41 percent.

Six-month Treasury bills ended at a discount rate of 7.77 to yield 8.19 percent, against the previous week's yield of 8.10 percent. Three-month T-bills ended at a discount rate of 7.78 to yield 8.04 percent, compared with the yield of 7.94 percent a week earlier.

Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.'s index of long-term Treasury bonds was up

1.09 points for the week, or 0.08 percent, to close at 1,285.42.

The Federal funds rate closed at 8 5/16 percent, slightly over the perceived Federal Reserve target rate of 8 1/4 percent. The closely followed Fed funds rate is what banks charge each other for overnight loans.

SPANAWAY, WA. (MARCH 2) UPI - A set of vandalized bleachers filled with hundreds of students evacuated from their junior high school because of a bomb threat collapsed Friday, sending 11 pupils to the hospital.

Emergency dispatch officials said at least 11 students from Cedar Crest Junior High School were transported to hospitals, but none of the injuries appeared to be major or life-threatening.

Jay Rifle, assistant superintendent for the Bethel School District, confirmed the school had received a bomb threat about 10:30 a.m.

Curt Benson, a spokesman for the Pierce County Sheriff's department, said investigators found no traces of a bomb at the school.

After the threat was received, however, the approximately 650 students at the school south of Tacoma were evacuated by police and fire units and filled the outdoor aluminum bleachers.

Benson said missing aluminum braces apparently caused the bleachers to collapse. He said investigators discovered missing supports at three other schools in the Bethel school district as well as at Cedar Crest.

''Apparently the aluminum braces were stolen,'' Benson said. ''You can get good money for aluminum on the recycling market.''

Benson said it appeared the bomb threat and the missing braces were unrelated.

Officials said some of the students were led by teachers across the football field outside, where they apparently climbed up on the aluminum bleachers for a better view of the evacuation process.

''Everybody started rocking the bleachers, and they started falling down '' said one student who escaped without serious injury by jumping off the top of the bleachers.

A spokesman at St. Joseph Hospital in Tacoma said less than an hour after the accident that two students had been brought in.

''One had a back injury,'' he said, ''the other was a knee. Neither were seriously hurt.''

Some students were treated at the scene with ice packs applied to their necks and shoulders.

A school staff member who asked not to be identified indicated the aluminum bleachers lining the football field frequently were the target of vandals. A few students indicated they had been told previously not to walk or sit on the bleachers because of possible safety problems. There was no immediate confirmation of that by school administrators.

ORLANDO, FL. (MARCH 2) UPI - Broadcasters and others accused cable television operators of a litany of dirty tricks Friday at a public hearing conducted by the Federal Communications Commission.

Satellite or wireless cable operators accused giant corporations such as the owners of Home Box Office, ESPN and TNT of trying to squeeze them out of business.

The cable operators said the corporations either refuse to offer the popular programs or charge exorbitant prices for them.

Broadcast television executives accused cable operators of either refusing to carry their signals or shifting them to other channels in an attempt to make it harder or impossible for viewers to find them.

''I think the current cable system is clearly noncompetitive,'' said John Sauder, president of Supreme Cable Co., of Austin, Texas.

Robert Williams Jr., president of Pee Dee Electricom, said because traditional cable companies feel threatened by operations such as his satellite cable company serving rural South Carolina, he is forced to pay 426 percent more for programming than what a comparable-sized traditional cable company would.

''Frankly, in my opinion, it's a national disgrace,'' he said.

''I think they act like, they smell like, they are monopolistic operators, and I think the customer suffers,'' said Robert Schmidt, chairman of Universal Television Corp., a wireless cable company in Bakersfield, Calif.

In 1987, 4.5 million, or 51 percent, of American homes were wired for cable.

Friday's hearing was the second of three by the FCC, which is reviewing the industry, as required by law, and plans to submit to Congress later this year an analysis of cable television.

Broadcasters said their concern was what they called cable's stranglehold on all television viewing. Cable operators control viewers' access to local over-the-air programming by playing channel switching games or refusing to carry the broadcast, broadcasters charged.

Harvey Cohen, president of WDZL-TV Miami, said if cable companies choose to do so, they can flip a switch, change a broadcast station to a new channel and, ''I'm off in Siberia. No one can find me.''

John Siegel, president of independent television station KBHK San Francisco, said one cable operator shifted his station's channel three days before sweeps, the period during which audience ratings are made.

Minority broadcasters accused cable operations of freezing them out altogether.

Commissioner James H. Quello said channel switching by cable operators was something with which the FCC must deal.

''Abuse invited regulation or overregulation. Arrogrance invites regulation or overregulation,'' Commissioner Ervin Duggan said.

''If you do have a monopoly, you will be competition or more regulation,'' Quello warned cable operators.

The House members conclude that the only thing more tragic than the 47 deaths was the Navy's failure to conduct what is termed a ''proper'' investigation. The chairman is proposing that an independent authority conduct future investigations.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 2) UPI - Northrop Corp. plans to start airing a television advertising campaign that a federal judge had ordered off the air over concern the ads would influence a fraud trial in which Northrop was a defendant, a spokesman said Friday.

Northrop will air the 30-second spots, which praise the work of the defense contractor, on the Prime Ticket cable network, spokesman James Hart said. Hart said there are seven different ads in the campaign.

Northrop pleaded guilty Tuesday to 34 felonies and agreed to pay $17 million to settle the defense fraud case involving defective weapons and parts for the Harrier jet and the air-launched cruise missile.

Judge Pamela Rymer ordered the ads pulled Feb. 12 because she was concerned they could influence potential jurors.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals stayed Rymer's order, but Northrop held off on airing the ads until after the case was settled.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - U.S. gasoline costs per mile traveled dropped by 57 percent in the 1980s while gas quality improved, the American Petroleum Institute said Sunday.

In 1988, the most recent year for which complete data are available, the fuel cost per mile traveled was 5.1 cents - after adjustment for inflation and taxation - compared to 11.9 cents in 1980, a study by the oil industry trade group found.

The study also showed gasoline prices rose an average of 10 cents a gallon last year but still were considerably lower than at the beginning of the decade.

Pump prices, including taxes, averaged $1.06 a gallon in 1989, compared to 96.3 cents in 1988. The API noted that after adjustments for inflation and higher taxes, the increase in 1989 was only about 5 cents a gallon.

By contrast, the average pump price was $1.22 in 1980. The following year the price hit an all-time high of $1.35 a gallon, the group said. The low point of the decade was in 1986, when the plunge in world oil prices reduced the average retail gasoline price of 93.1 cents a gallon.

While the fuel cost entailed in car travel has been declining, the API said the quality of gasoline has improved.

The trade group cited the reduced use of lead, better additives, and lower airborne levels of lead and other emissions. It pointed out that gasoline's quality was upgraded at the same time that the performance of automobiles was maintained or enhanced by more sophisticated engines and environmental control equipment.

The API's study claimed these changes ''raised the value of gasoline to consumers individually and collectively by several cents per gallon.''

BOSTON (MARCH 2) UPI - A young woman co-worker reportedly told a special grand jury Friday she never had a romantic relationship with Charles Stuart, the man suspected of duping the nation in his wife's killing last October.

Deborah J. Allen, 23, of Millis appeared before a Suffolk County special grand jury in its sixth meeting since Stuart jumped to his death in Boston Harbor Jan. 4 as investigators identified him as the prime suspect in the death of his wife, Carol.

Grand jury proceedings are not open to the public, but Allen's lawyer,

Thomas Dwyer, released a statement summarizing the testimony of the blond Brown University graduate who met Stuart while working at the posh Kakas & Sons fur salon on Boston's Newbury Street.

Allen testified that she and Stuart never had a romantic relationship, and that Stuart never showed any sign that he intended to kill his wife and their unborn child, Dwyer said.

Allen conceded that she used Stuart's telephone credit card to call him when he was hospitalized last fall, but only because, as a college student her finances were limited.

Allen, who played women's hockey at Brown before graduating last June, is a graduate student at Babson College.

Charles Stuart and his pregnant wife, Carol, were shot Oct. 23, 1989, after they left a birthing class at a downtown hospital. Stuart, who called authorities for help over his car phone, told police the attacker was a black gunman.

Stuart jumped to his death Jan. 4, 1990, as police were about to arrest him after his brother Matthew went to police with evidence that incriminated the Boston furrier.

Investigators now believe Charles Stuart shot his wife in the head, killing her, and it would turn out, their unborn son, then shot himself in the abdomen to divert suspicion. The initial focus on a black suspect and subsequent police search of Boston's Mission Hill neighborhood heightened racial tension in the city.

GILROY, CA. (MARCH 2) UPI - Misdemeanor vehicle manslaughter charges were filed Friday against Aileen Gallo, wife of internationally known winemaker Julio Gallo, a Santa Clara County prosecutor said.

Mrs. Gallo, 74, was the driver of a car that collided in the Pacheco Pass area with a vehicle driven by Sharon Kauk, 26, a San Jose special education teacher, who was killed in the crash.

''The evidence suggests that the Gallo car crossed over the center line and collided with the other vehicle,'' said Tom Farris, deputy district attorney.

The charges, filed against Mrs. Gallo in Municipal Court, carry a maximum jail term of one year and a fine of up to $1,000, Farris said.

Aileen and Julio Gallo were returning to their Modesto home from Pebble Beach on Jan. 2 when their Lincoln Town Car collided with Kauk's Honda Civic on Highway 52.

Kauk, her husband, Timothy, 27, and 3-month-old son, Matthew, had been en route home after visiting relatives in Los Angeles during the Christmas holidays.

Kauk was dead at the scene and her son sustained injuries that allegedly resulted in hearing impairment.

The Gallos were hopsitalized overnight in San Jose Medical Center, then returned home.

The Kauk family filed a Superior Court lawsuit against the Gallos Jan. 26, seeking unspecified compensation for medical bills, pain and emotional loss.

Julio Gallo, 79, and his brother, Ernest, 80, are owners of the world's largest winery. Their Modesto operation has annual sales in excess of $1 billion.

TAMPA, FL. (MARCH 2) UPI - The head of baseball's players association said Friday night he expects ''a meeting of some sort'' with owners' representatives Monday in New York.

Don Fehr made the comments as his baseball caravan stopped in Florida, with the union chief briefing 125 major-league players on the labor impasse that has shut down spring training. Fehr met with players in Arizona and California earlier this week.

After a two-hour, 15-minute session with Fehr in a hotel conference room, players emerged emphasizing the solidarity of the union as the lockout continued into its third week.

''Whether an agreement is reached tomorrow, next week or in the middle of the season, I think we'll stand strong together,'' said American League Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen of Kansas City, who likely would have made his first Grapefruit League start Friday afternoon. ''Tonight's meeting was productive because when you hear things third- or fourth-hand, they're often blown out of proportion. People think the whole problem is over the arbitration issue, but it's not.''

Instead of facing the Red Sox Friday, Saberhagen tossed baseballs softly to a friend.

''It's nothing like spring training, though,'' he said. ''I'm throwing off mounds with holes in them.''

Fehr will return to New York on Saturday and said negotiations are expected to resume for the first time since talks broke off Feb. 26.

''Talks ended because we have to meet with our players and keep them up to date,'' said an exhausted Fehr, slumped in a seat at the head of the conference room. ''We've had three meetings and seen nearly half of all the players the last three days and my feeling about our solidarity hasn't changed a bit.

''Nobody's come up with a bright idea to bridge the problems of salary arbitration, but I expect a meeting of some sort Monday. I have no particular expectations for that meeting. We're going to go back to the table, review where we are and take it from there.''

Fehr said no single topic dominated the meeting, with players asking about the possible length of spring training, how much time they would have to report to camp if an agreement is reached and general questions on the progress of negotiations.

''The main thing we accomplished tonight is that we made sure the actions of the negotiating committee are consistent with what the players believe '' said Orel Hershiser of Los Angeles, the 1988 National League Cy Young Award winner who also was scheduled to make his first spring start Friday. ''We're not making any demands - we're willing to go and play baseball right now. But we can't.''

Montreal right-hander Dennis Martinez said the meeting simply reinforced the togetherness between union members.

''The owners have been preparing for a lockout for a couple of years,'' Martinez said. ''We've given the union the right to negotiate for us and I think they are doing the right things for us right now. I've been trying to stay in shape by throwing to my 16-year-old son, Dennis Jr., in Miami. We have a little field down the block from our house and I'm enjoying spending time with my son.''

(MARCH 2) UPI - President Bush prepares for a desert summit with Japan's leader... A nationwide strike by Greyhound bus drivers leaves thousands stranded... And another strong aftershock jolts jittery Californians... U-P-I has these top stories and more, next.

Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu is en route to California for the start of a two-day summit with President Bush that's expected to focus on trade issues.

The summit at Palm Springs comes amid mounting trade tensions between the two countries. Trade talks in Tokyo stalled last week, and the current U-S trade deficit with Japan is about 50-BILLION dollars.

In the summit with Kaifu, Bush is expected to present his concerns about the imbalance. He's also expected to do some gentle arm-twisting to avert what many fear might become a full-scale trade war.

But both Washington and Tokyo say it's NOT likely that any specific agreements will come out of the Palm Springs meeting.

Other issues also are on the agenda. The White House says once Kaifu arrives today, the two men will discuss defense and strategic issues.

Bus passengers were stranded across the country today when more than nine-thousand Greyhond workers walked off the job.

Picket lines went up at Greyhound terminals early this morning after the company and the unions failed to reach contract agreement. The strike focuses on pay and job security issues.

Greyhound says some buses are running today with replacement drivers or workers who crossed picket lines. The company expects to have full service by the end of the month.

Three strike-related incidents were reported, including one in Chicago when a gasoline bomb apparently was planted under a car. NO serious injuries were reported.

Greyhound, the nation's largest inter-city bus line, provides the only public transportation to about nine-thousand communities that have NO airlines or rail service.

The last strike against Greyhound was in 1983 and lasted 48 days.

(MARCH 2) UPI - 21 top officers of the Romanian secret police went on trial today... charged with launching a massacre of protesters in the Transylvanian town of Timisoara that sparked the December uprising.

Romanians watched the opening of the trial on national television. The defendants appeared with their heads shaved and wearing blue-and-white prison pajamas.

The officers are charged with ordering security forces to fire on protesters and destroying evidence of the massacre. Prosecutors charge the officers had 40 corpses smuggled to the capital to be incinerated and the ashes dumped in a sewer.

Also today... the military judge who sentenced dictator Nicolae Ceausescu to death was found shot and killed in his office. The government says his death is an apparent suicide that follows what a spokesman terms a ''severe nervous breakdown.''

A special prosecutor has been named to investigate charges that former Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel Pierce engaged in conspiracy to funnel federal low-cost housing grants to political friends.

A panel of federal judges named former federal judge Arlin Adams of Philadelphia to head the investigation. Adams will have authority to prosecute Pierce and any HUD officials found to have engaged in criminal activity in the period being investigated between 1984 to 1988.

Pierce has refused to testify about mushrooming allegations of fraud when called upon to do so by congressional committees. He invoked his Fifth Amendment guarantee against self-incrimination. He came to be known as ''Silent Sam'' for the way he avoided the limelight during Ronald Reagan's eight years as president.

Housing Secretary Kemp estimates the HUD scandal will cost taxpayers as much as four-BILLION dollars. Much of the money for subsidized housing went to politically connected Republicans or developers represented by high-powered G-O-P consultants with ties to the Reagan administration.

(MARCH 2) UPI - A House panel today sharply criticized the Navy's investigation of the U-S-S Iowa explosion.

A report from a sub-committee of the House Armed Services Committee says the Navy did NOT prove its claim that gunner's mate Clayton Hartwig caused the explosion that killed himself and 46 other sailors last April 19th.

The report said- quote- ''By the standards of the U-S justice system, the subcommittee does NOT believe that Clayton Harwig could be convicted of any crime.''

The subcommittee chairman said ''there is something inherently wrong with an organization investigating itself,'' and suggested the need for ''an outside, independent investigative body for the military services.''

The full committee's chairman, Representative Les Aspin, echoed that view.

At the Pentagon, the Navy said it ''stands by its conclusion'' that the blast- quote- ''was the result of a wrongful intentional act, most probably committed by'' Hartwig.

The Egyptian tourism minister says the luxury hotel that went up in flames yesterday... killing 19 tourists... did NOT have a modern fire detector.

A retired Houston accountant and 18 others died after an oven set an Arabic tent in the hotel lobby on fire. 70 other people were injured, including three Americans.

The tourism minister says all new hotels will be required to have advanced fire detectors, but he did NOT say if existing hotels would be required to improve their fire detector and sprinkler systems.

The Heliopolis Sheraton had NO sprinkler system.

Cairo's municipal authority said older hotels should at the very least start removing tents and other fire risks from their premises.

Many people broke bones from jumping out windows to escape flames. 70 people were injured. Three Americans are still missing.

(MARCH 2) UPI - A strong after-shock rolled across southern California this morning... triggering rock slides along mountain roads... causing minor damage and jolting residents still recovering from a temblor earlier in the week.

NO injuries were reported in the after-shock... which measured four-point-seven on the Richter scale. It was NOT nearly as drastic as Wednesday's rolling earthquake that measured five-point-five on the Richter scale and was felt over 13-thousand square miles.

But concern about the potential for already weakened structures to collapse has prompted Pomona, California, officials to cordon off the First Baptist Church. City officials in Upland had several reports of minor damage.

Wednesday's quake inflicted nearly 14-Million dollars in damage and produced more anxiety than serious harm.

Also today, a small earthquake measuring three-point-four on the Richter scale struck southern Illinois near St. Louis, but officials report NO damage.

Energy Secretary Watkins warned of a potential crisis in the storage of nuclear waste.

He told a Senate panel today that the government must find a voluteer site for a temporary nuclear waste dump within two years. If one ISN'T found in that time, it could create a crisis for 27 nuclear plants that Watkins says will run out of storage space for spent reactor fuel by 1998.

Watkins says a volunteer temporary site is needed because his department WON'T be able to open its planned permanent site in Nevada before 2010 at the earliest.

And he says the temporary location must be found within two years in order to give his department enough time for geological studies to make sure the waste can be stored safely.

Watkins says his department must try to persuade a state or an Indian tribe to voluteer a dump site.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu arrives this evening at Palm Springs, California, for the start of a two-day summit with President Bush. The meeting comes as trade tensions between the two countries are mounting, and some observers fear they could escalate into a full-scale trade war. One topic almost sure to come up is the current 50-BILLION-dollar U-S trade deficit with Japan.

President Bush brought his anti-drug message to Santa Ana, California, today in a speech to thousands of teen-agers at an outdoor rally. He emphasized the need to reduce the American demand for illegal drugs, telling the youngsters ''drug abuse in this country is still too far widespread.'' Earlier today, Bush spoke at a breakfast for T-V industry figures, where he praised the industry for its attempts to discourage drug abuse.

More than nine-thousand Greyhound employees went on strike today, leaving thousands of bus travelers stranded across the country. The dispute centers on pay and job security. (MARCH 2) UPI - President Bush welcomes Japan's prime minister for trade talks... that story and other top news of the day from the wires of United Press International.

President Bush and Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu opened their two-day summit with a one-on-one meeting today in Rancho Mirage, California.

The White House said today's talks would focus on defense and strategic issues, including Japan's acceptance of a plan to cut U-S forces in the Pacific Rim by 10 percent.

Tomorrow, the talks will get down to their main focus- trade issues between the two countries. Of major concern to Bush is the 50-BILLION-dollar U-S trade deficit with Japan.

Washington has been trying for years to get Japan to open its markets wider to foreign imports, and it's feared that mounting trade tensions between Tokyo and Washington could lead to all-out economic confrontation. Observers hope the California summit can avert such an outcome.

But both sides say it's unlikely that any major agreements will come out of this meeting.

Talks to organize the first peaceful shift of political power in Nicaragua in this century are reported to be ''paralyzed''- but that doesn't mean the negotiations are at an impasse.

Transition talks between President-elect Chamorro and the ruling Sandinista government were recessed today but are expected to resume.

Chamorro's top adviser met with Defense Minister Humberto Ortega- brother of lame-duck President Daniel Ortega- for three days beginning Tuesday.

Sandinista sources say the talks concerned conditions set for the transition of power. Opposition sources say the Sandinistas have concentrated merely on ''protocol.''

The opposition official adds that the Sandinistas want to retain control over the military and the Interior Ministry.

Chamorro already has said she intends to name someone to replace Humberto Ortega as head of the Nicaraguan military as soon as possible.

(MARCH 2) UPI - Exxon suspended all tanker and barge operations at two New Jersey facilities today following the second major oil spill in the Arthur Kill waterway in two months.

Operations were suspended at the Bayway Refinery at Linden and at the Bayonne Terminal, pending an investigation of last night's spill of 35-hundred gallons of oil into the Arthur Kill. The spill came when a hose broke while oil was being put into a barge at the Bayway Refinery.

Most of the oil was contained by booms, but Exxon says it's ordering the suspensions to assure consumers of the company's intent to be environmentally responsible.

The spill came while workers in the nearby Kill Van Kull waterway were cleaning up 30-thousand gallons of oil that leaked Wednesday from a barge at an Exxon dock.

Another spill at the Bayway Refinery in January dumped more than one-half-Million gallons of oil into the Arthur Kill.

The two waterways serve as the entrance to New Jersey's chief port area.

Helms, the leading conservative voice in the Senate, says every step Gorbachev has taken inside the Soviet Union has been ''to consolidate and centralize his own personal power.''

He says the Soviet president has built a huge military machine, has nearly demilitarized Europe, and- in the senator's words- ''wants to turn the world into a socialist system dominated by the Soviet Union.''

Helms says the central feature of U-S foreign policy should be ''the break-up of the Soviet Union.''

Sheymov also says K-G-B bodyguards assassinated an Afghan leader in 1979 at the time of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

In addition, he said the Soviet intelligence agency probably assassinated Pakistan's President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq in an airplane explosion in 1988.

#90062p0006 03/03/1990 ~PR Newswire
WILMINGTON, DE. (MARCH 3) PR NEWSWIRE - The Six-member 1990 International Trans-Antarctica Expedition team completed its historic 4,000-mile, seven-month crossing of Antarctica today (March 3), at 7:06 a.m. EST.

The team co-led by Will Steger and representing the United States, France, the Soviet Union, Japan, People's Republic of China, and Great Britain, are reported to be healthy and elated to have completed this first cross-country ski and dog-sled traverse of Antarctica across its widest point.

During the trek, the team endured 60 days of blizzards, whiteouts, and severe cold. Temperatures dropped to minus 113 degrees F with windchill. "The weather was worse than anything we could have imagined," said Steger. "we depended on our clothing systems not just to keep us warm, but alive."

The Du Pont fiberfill group is the official sponsor of the specially constructed insulated garments and sleeping bags for the adventure.

Du Pont has a history of expedition sponsorship and product support. Three years ago, Will Steger relied on Du Pont insulations to protect himself and his team members of the first confirmed "'unresupplied" dog- sled trek to the North Pole. In 1988, he used Du Pont fiberfill for a North-to-South crossing of Greenland in preparation for the Trans-Antarctica Expedition.

"We became involved with Steger and the expedition because we were confident the team could depend on our products for protection," explained Du Pont fiberfill account manager Bob Van Dyke. "We consider the prolonged exposure to Antarctica's severe climate excellent testimony to the performance of our insulating fibers."

Research scientists from Du Pont worked closely with the team to develop the custom-made parkas and pants containing Du Pont-certified "Thermolite" thin insulation, "Thermoloft" mid-loft insulation, and "Quallofil" high-loft insulation. The expedition team also used specially designed sleeping bags containing approximately 10 pounds each of Du Pont "Quallofil" insulation.

Members of the International Trans-Antarctica Expedition established the highest possible standards for themselves and the performance of their equipment. Du Pont provided the most technically-advanced insulations available to assure the safety and success of the team's historic achievement.

The company's tollfree "Polar Phone" (1-800-333-TREK) provided an indication of the popularity of the Trans-Antarctica adventure. In February alone, over 40,000 armchair enthusiasts called for weekly expedition updates.

(MARCH 3) UPI - President Bush says Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu's visit to the United States is quote- ''a significant gesture about the friendship between our countries.'' The two leaders are in Rancho Mirage, California, holding two days of talks centered on trade issues. This is the leaders' second meeting in six months.

Greyhound bus drivers have been on strike for one day and it has given more than a few travelers headaches. The nationwide walk-out left many would-be bus passengers stranded Friday, scrambling to find alternate transportation. The strike appears to be a gain for Amtrak. The passenger rail service is honoring many Greyhound tickets.

The first day of the Greyhound strike was marred by violence in Chicago when a sniper opened fire on a bus traveling on the city's Dan Ryan Expressway. State police say several people sustained injuries, apparently from flying glass. Earlier, police defused a Molotov cocktail next to a Greyhound bus maintenance building on Chicago's near Northwest Side.

21 top officers of the Romanian secret police appeared in court Friday to face charges stemming from their involvement in the December crackdown on pro-reform protesters. The defendants are charged with ordering security forces to fire on protesters in the city of Timisoara and destroying evidence of the massacre.

Nicaraguan President-elect Chamorro says the Sandinistas are trying to block a transfer of power. Transition talks between the two sides came to a halt Friday, but a coalition source says they will continue. Issues such as control of the military and the future of other Sandinista-controlled institutions are stumbling blocks.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 3) UPI - Dr. Elizabeth Morgan, given back her passport by the same appeals court that took it away 3 1/2 years ago in a celebrated child custody case, said she will wait a few days for publicity do die down before traveling to New Zealand to visit her daughter.

The District of Columbia Court of Appeals turned over the passport to Morgan Friday a day after a lower court judge, who jailed Morgan for more than two years on contempt of court, ruled that releasing the passport ''is in the best interests of the minor child.''

Morgan, a plastic surgeon, had said that if she won back her passport she would immediately travel to Christchurch, New Zealand, for the next phase of the international custody battle for her 7-year-old daughter Hilary.

But when she emerged from her lawyer's office late Friday, Morgan said: ''My plan is to not rush out to see her and make it a media event, but to meet with her lawyer and meet with those who know her to plan what's best for her.''

She said she wouldn't leave for a couple of days so she can work on a multimillion-dollar lawsuit filed against her and others by her former husband. She would not disclose when she planned to fly to New Zealand.

Asked what she will say to her daughter when she sees her, Morgan replied: ''I will say 'I love you. I'm glad you're safe.'''

Hilary's father, Eric Foretich, 47, a northern Virginia oral surgeon, is already in New Zealand trying to gain custody of the child.

Morgan, 42, claims Foretich sexually abused Hilary, a contention he has repeatedly denied. The two were legally separated before Hilary's birth.

The appeals court rejected a motion from Foretich's attorney that would have made the return of Morgan's passport contingent on her agreement to reliniquish it upon her return from New Zealand. Foretich's attorney, Elaine Mittleman, said she feared Morgan would take Hilary and flee to a third country.

Morgan surrendered her passport to the appeals court in August 1986, when she went to jail for three days rather than obey a court order giving Foretich limited visitation of their only child.

The custody and visitation battle escalated, and in August 1987, Morgan sent Hilary into hiding with her parents, defying D.C. Superior Court Judge Herbert Dixon's order that she again allow Foretich visitation rights.

When Morgan refused to reveal the child's whereabouts, Dixon found her in contempt of court. She spent 25 months in the D.C. Jail.

Morgan was released last September, but only after Congress passed a special law limiting such contempt of court jailings in the District of Columbia. President Bush signed the bill.

Hilary surfaced last week in New Zealand, where she has been living in Christchurch since 1988 with her maternal grandparents, William and Antonia Morgan.

(MARCH 3) UPI - When Joe Dumars saw Isiah Thomas steal the ball, he knew exactly what to do. He had seen the play before.

Dumars, who scored 34 points to lead the Detroit Pistons to a 115-112 overtime victory Friday night against the Philadelphia 76ers, made a layup off a Thomas steal with 2.5 seconds left that gave the Pistons a 104-103 lead in regulation.

''It was the exact same situation,'' said Dumars, referring to a playoff game against Boston. ''I was on the opposite side of the court when I saw Isiah steal the ball and I just went to the basket. I thought of the Boston game when I went to the bench.''

Dumars and the rest of the Pistons will never forget the Boston game.

With the Pistons leading the Celtics in the closing seconds of the 1987 Eastern Confernce Finals, Larry Bird stole Thomas' inbounds pass and Dennis Johnson went in for a layup and a Boston victory.

Thomas put the Pistons in a position to win when he banked in a three-pointer with 5.5 seconds left to bring the Pistons within 103-102. Refusing to call a a timeout, Sixer Mike Gminski tried to pass to Hersey Hawkins but Thomas intercepted, drove to the basket, and found Dumars who was driving from the left side.

Charles Barkley of Philadelphia was then fouled with 0.2 seconds left, but he made only one of two free throws to send the game into the extra period.

In overtime, the score was tied 110-110 when Dumars took the ball on the left wing and drove the middle for a layup. He was fouled on the play and completed the three-point play with 39 seconds left for a 113-110 lead.

''I don't like these exciting games,'' Thomas said. ''I like the ones where we are up 10 and everyone is happy, having a good time.''

Dumars made 18 of 19 free throws, including six on technical fouls. Three resulted from illegal defense calls and one resulted from having too many players on the court.

James Edwards added 26 points and Thomas 21 for the Pistons.

Barkley led the Sixers with 26 points but did not score in overtime. Rick Mahorn and Scott Brooks each added 20 points for Philadelphia.

''They know that they're going to see us in the Eastern Conference Finals and we know that we're going to see them,'' Barkley said. ''This was our Christmas present to them. We outplayed them in every phase of the game.''

Elsewhere in the NBA, Chicago blasted New Jersey 112-91, Atlanta pasted Milwaukee 132-110, Dallas topped Phoenix 108-102, Boston downed Miami 122-110, San Antonio handled Golden State 131-115, Seattle crushed Minnesota 99-83 and the Los Angeles Lakers routed Cleveland 124-93.

Hawks 132, Bucks 110

At Atlanta, Dominique Wilkins made 20 of 23 shots from the floor, finishing with 44 points to pace Atlanta to its fifth straight triumph. Wilkins hit his last 13 field goal attempts. Harper had 25 and Rolando Blackman added 24. Tom Chambers and Kevin Johnson scored 28 points each for the Suns.

Celtics 122, Heat 110

At Miami, Larry Bird scored 28 points and Kevin McHale scored 22 of his 26 points in the second half to help the Celtics to their fourth triumph in a row. McHale scored 9 points during a 15-5 third-quarter run and Boston never looked back. Rony Seikaly led the Heat with 25 points.

Spurs 131, Warriors 115

At San Antonio, Rookie David Robinson scored a career-high 41 points, grabbed 17 rebounds, blocked 5 shots, made three steals and added two assists to lead San Antonio. Terry Cummings added 29 points and 12 rebounds for San Antonio which had seven players reach double figures. Chris Mullin led Golden State, with 30 points, 8 rebounds and 7 assists.

Sonics 99, Timberwolves 83

At Seattle, Derrick McKey scored 12 of his 18 points in the third quarter and Seattle handed Minnesota its 17th consecutive road loss. Six Seattle players reached double figures with Shawn Kemp scoring 16 and Jim Farmer adding 12. Rookie Pooh Richardson led the Timberwolves with 19 points, 13 in the fourth quarter.

Lakers 124, Cavaliers 93

At Inglewood, Calif., Magic Johnson scored 26 points, and Byron Scott and Orlando Woolridge each added 17 to spark the Lakers to their second-largest margin of victory this season. Larry Nance scored 21 points for Cleveland, playing without guard Mark Price who suffered an injury against Denver Thursday.

NEW YORK (MARCH 3) UPI - Two inmates broke through a barred window and bolted from Rikers Island Friday night, but authorities captured them hours later in an empty guard tower at the city jail, officials said.

Two civilian workers reported seeing the pair running about 9:15 a.m., said Correction Department spokeswoman Ruby Ryles.

Ryles said the inmates were discovered two hours later by prison officials in an unoccupied guard tower on the island. The escapees did not resist capture, and no injuries were reported, she said.

''They cut through a window in a housing area,'' said Ryles. ''They were not yet locked in their cells for the night.''

Ryles said information on how the two men cut through the bars of a prison window was not immediately available.

The incident was the first break this year from Rikers Island, located in the East River between Queens and the Bronx, Ryles said.

One of the escapees, Sergio Rodriquez, was convicted of attempted murder, and had recently been sentenced to 30 to 55 years in prison for a variety of convictions, while Rayico Bacic, a parole violator, was being held on attempted murder, robbery and weapons charges, Ryles said.

Both men will be charged with attempted escape, Ryles said.

She said the perimeter of the island was being watched early Saturday as officials continued a head count of inmates in the center.

NEW YORK (MARCH 3) UPI - Walter Annenberg, former ambassador and publishing magnate, will give $50 million to the United Negro College Fund the largest gift to black colleges on record, The New York Times reported Saturday.

Annenberg, 82, the former U.S. Ambassador to Britain, was scheduled to announce the gift, one of the largest contributions ever made to American higher education, Saturday morning at his estate near Palm Springs, Calif. the Times said.

President George Bush, who is the honorary chairman of UNCF's recent fund-raising effort, and Mrs. Bush were to be Annenberg's guests this weekend.

Annenberg called the fund a ''major force for positive change'' because of the millions of dollars it raises and dedicates to giving thousands of young blacks ''an opportunity to realize their full potential.''

''As a society, we cannot afford to waste our most valuable resources - our citizens,'' Annenberg was quoted as saying in the newspaper.

The fund, founded in 1944, is a consortium of 41 private black colleges that raised $45.8 million for its member institutions last year, according to the Times.

''Words cannot do justice to my feelings of gratitude,'' said Christopher Edley, president of the fund, in a prepared statement quoted by the newspaper.

The largest gift to a single educational institution is believed have been made by Robert Woodruff, former chairman of the Coca-Cola Company, who gave $105 million to Atlanta's Emory University in the late 70s, the Times said.

Comedian Bill Cosby made the largest contribution to a black college in 1988 when he contributed $20 million to Spelman College in Atlanta.

Annenberg's gift opens the UNCF's fourth capital drive, called ''Campaign 2000: An Investment in America's Future,'' of which Bush is the honorary chairman, the newspaper said.

The three-year drive seeks to raise $540 million for capital expenses, scholarships, curriculum and faculty development and other uses at the fund's member institutes, the Times said.

Annenberg, who developed his father's company, Triangle Publications, into a massive publishing empire, founded Seventeen and TV Guide magazines before selling the firm for $3 billion in 1988.

A close friend of recent Republican presidents, Annenberg served as Ambassador to the Court of St. James from 1969 to 1974.

Annenberg, who has supported UNCF for more than a decade, also has made significant financial contributions to numerous universities across the country, the Times said.

(MARCH 3) UPI - Last season, Tony Granato of the New York Rangers was the top rookie goal-scorer in the league with 36, breaking the club record for goals by a rookie in a year.

This season, it is Darren Turcotte's turn. He scored twice and added an assist Friday night on his 22nd birthday, helping the Rangers overcome the New York Islanders 6-3. Turcotte has 27 goals this season, tops in the league among rookies. He has scored in five straight games, including a hat trick against the Boston Bruins.

''Everything I shoot seems to go in,'' Turcotte said. ''I can't explain it but as the year goes on I go through these hot periods and hopefully I'll be able to keep it going for the last 14 games and carry it into the playoffs.

''I've scored a hat trick on my birthday the last couple of years. I almost got one tonight.''

Turcotte's first goal sparked a four-goal rally and tied the score 3-3 with just 32 seconds left in the second period. The Islanders had erased a 2-0 deficit with three second-period goals.

John Ogrodnick stunned the Islanders 48 seconds into the third period with a tip-in power-play goal to give the Rangers a 4-3 lead. Turcotte sealed the victory with a breakaway rush from mid-ice and a superb move on Islanders goaltender Glenn Healy, who he deked to the ice before threading the puck into the top of the net.

''Carey Wilson made a great pass up the middle,'' Turcotte said. ''I protected the puck with my body, gave Healy a little move and made him go down, then put it up top. That's the spot I like to put it in.''

Turcotte nearly got his hat trick at 9:54 of the third on the power play, but Ulf Dahlen deflected his shot past Healy for his 18th of the season.

The game was marred by several brawls, ugly exchanges between players and fans, and unsafe ice conditions that forced lengthy delays while patches of the surface were repaired. Islanders Coach Al Arbour verbally abused referee Rob Shick repeatedly, and had to be restrained by Madison Square Garden security from going after Shick following the game.

After the second period, Shick handed out a bench minor penalty against Arbour. The Rangers scored the winning goal on the ensuing power play.

''Al came to me at the end of the first period to complain about the ice and about my calls,'' Shick said. ''He did the same thing at the end of the second period. I warned him and he was assessed a penalty for unsportsmanlike conduct.

''The ice was just awful. There were chips all along the side even after it was cut.''

Islanders General Manager Bill Torrey was furious after the game, claiming that several of his players had been injured by the unsafe ice surface.

''This place is a joke,'' Torrey said. ''We have three players hurt in the locker room and we can't get a doctor yet. The ruts in the ice injured my players.''

Elsewhere in the NHL, Detroit nipped Toronto 3-2 in overtime, New Jersey bounced Pittsburgh 6-5, Hartford nipped Washington 4-3, and Winnipeg bombed Los Angeles 9-3.

Red Wings 3, Maple Leafs 2, OT

At Detroit, Steve Yzerman scored his second goal of the game 3:44 into overtime to lift Detroit in a fight-marred game. The victory moved the Red Wings out of the Norris Division cellar, one point ahead of Minnesota. Detroit has lost only twice in its last 11 games (5-2-4). Toronto remained five points behind the division co-leaders Chicago and St. Louis.

Devils 6, Penguins 5

At East Rutherford, N.J., Jon Morris scored his first NHL goal one day after his promotion to New Jersey and Pat Conacher added his first of the season 1:55 later for the Devils, who won for only the third time in 16 games. Pittsburgh remained winless on the road since Mario Lemieux left the lineup with a back injury. Pittsburgh fell to 0-4-1 in its last five road games.

Whalers 4, Capitals 3

At Landover, Md., Kevin Dineen scored goals 30 seconds apart in the third period to give Hartford its first victory in 27 tries this season when trailing after two periods.

Jets 9, Kings 3

At Winnipeg, Manitoba, Tomas Steen scored on his first shot after returning to the active list from a bad back and assisted on two other goals to lead Winnipeg. Doug Evans scored a pair of goals, to push the Jets eight points ahead of fourth-place Los Angeles in the Smythe Division.

SCOTTSDALE, AZ. (MARCH 3) UPI - Bullets punctuated the first day of a nationwide strike by 9,000 Greyhound employees as the company was focusing more on hiring replacement drivers than on settling the bitter contract dispute.

A sniper fired two shots at a Greyhound bus Friday night as it traveled down an expressway on Chicago's South Side, showering passengers with broken glass, police said.

The shots shattered two windows and two passengers aboard the Memphis-bound bus were cut by flying glass, but did not require hospitalization, said Illinois State Police Sgt. Larry Edwards. He said police had not yet determined whether the incident was strike-related.

''They're investigating it,'' Edwards said. ''But since no one is in custody, we can't tell.''

Earlier Friday, substitute drivers at Greyhound's downtown Chicago station claimed shots were fired at their buses, police said. A bullet pierced a windshield of one of the vehicles, but there were no injuries.

Police Friday also safely defused a Molotov cocktail in a parking lot next to a Greyhound bus maintenance building in Chicago.

In Cleveland and Houston, pickets claimed they were struck by departing buses. There were no serious injuries.

Failing to resolve their differences over pay and job security at the bargaining table, picket lines went up early Friday outside Greyhound terminals across the country.

Contract talks that started four months ago and continued through the week with the help of a federal mediator ended when the strike began and there was no word on when they would resume.

The Amalgamated Transit Union said, ''The company's actions amount to a tragic breach of faith with ... workers who have accepted significant wage and benefit reductions since 1983. Profits are up and ridership is up, and the reward for Greyhound workers has been a slap in the face.''

The union called on Greyhound, which had spent the past two weeks recruiting strikebreakers, to return to the bargaining table to negotiate ''in good faith.''

P. Anthony Lannie, executive vice president and Greyhound's chief negotiator, said some buses ran Friday with replacement drivers or non-strikers. He said Greyhound expects to have the entire system back in operation before the end of March as more replacements were hired.

Company spokesman George Gravley said, ''Our latest figures are that about 20 percent of our business was running today, based on passenger volume.'' Most of that traffic, he said, was on major highways.

Gravley said about 700 ''permanent'' replacement drivers began work Friday while about 1,100 union workers remained on the job.

Jeffrey Nelson of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions said workers were forced to strike because Greyhound ''has refused to bargain in good faith.''

He said the company imposed its latest contract offer, one made Jan. 10 at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

Greyhound said the average full-time driver earned $24,743 in 1989 and the 1,500 drivers with the most seniority averaged $33,218.

The strike caught travelers by surprise and left many stranded.

In Jackson, Miss., Flossie Westbrook, 66, said she was not told of the strike threat Thursday morning when she purchased a ticket to Chicago.

''I'm shocked, but where else is there for me to go?'' she said. ''I've got to get to Chicago,'' and all seats via Amtrak were booked.

Greyhound carries an average of about 60,000 passengers a day and serves about 9,500 communities in the 48 contiguous states, claiming it provides the only public transportation to about 9,000 communities that have no airline or rail passenger service.

In addition to 6,300 drivers, the contract that expired covered 1,475 maintenance workers and 1,660 office workers in telephone information centers in Omaha, Neb., and Charlotte, N.C., and the accounting center in West Des Moines, Iowa.

Lannie said the company package was worth $14.1 million, or 6.9 percent, in the first year and $63 million over three years, which he called ''an excellent offer from a company that lost almost $20 million over the last three years.''

''That is all this company can afford,'' Lannie said, ''and the union did not dispute the company's inability to increase its offer. Instead, they wanted us to increase fares for our passengers by 10 percent and we refused to do that.''

The union said its counterproposal Thursday would have cost the company no more than $20 million in the first year and provided wage and benefit increases averaging between 4 and 5 percent.

The last strike against Greyhound covered 48 days in 1983. The bus company was sold by Greyhound Corp. in 1987 to a group of Dallas-based investors headed by Fred G. Currey. At the time, the union reached an agreement with the new owners that included wage concessions.

CAPE CANAVERAL, FL. (MARCH 3) UPI - The Atlantis astronauts worked through a final full day in space Saturday, wrapping up a clandestine military mission scheduled to end Sunday with re-entry and landing in California's Mojave Desert.

Working under a cloak of secrecy, the five-man all-military crew presumably spent the day Saturday finishing on-board experiments, taking pictures of Earth and its environment and wrapping up the usual slate of medical experiments to learn more about human adaptation to weightlessness.

But as usual with such Pentagon-chartered shuttle flights, communications between the astronauts and mission control in Houston have been blacked out throughout the mission and no details about the crew's activities in orbit have been released.

The Air Force, however, allowed NASA to announce Thursday that Atlantis was ''expected'' to glide to a landing Sunday at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert northeast of Los Angeles. The exact landing time was not expected to be announced until 24 hours before touchdown.

The primary goal of the 34th shuttle mission was accomplished earlier, sources said, with the successful deployment of what is believed to be an advanced 19-ton photo-reconnaissance satellite built to spy on the Soviet Union.

Following past shuttle practice, the astronauts presumably have spent the rest of their time in space carrying out classified and unclassified experiments, along with medical research and extensive Earth photography.

Atlantis skipper John Chreighton and co-pilot John Casper, both 46, were expected to test the spaceplane's hydraulic steering system Saturday and to test fire rocket thrusters to make sure the orbiter is ready for its blazing re-entry Sunday.

Once back on the ground, Navy Capt. Creighton, Air Force Col. Casper, Marine Lt. Col. David Hilmers, 40; Air Force Col. Richard ''Mike'' Mullane 44; and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Pierre Thuot, 34, planned to fly back to their homes in Houston after brief medical checks and reunions with friends and family members.

Back at the Kennedy Space Center, meanwhile, engineers are gearing up for the next shuttle launch, the April 12 flight of the shuttle Discovery on a long-awaited showcase mission to put the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope in orbit.

Discovery is scheduled to be moved from its hangar to the nearby Vehicle Assembly Building Monday for attachment to a pair of solid-fuel boosters and an external fuel tank. If all goes well, the assembled space vehicle will be hauled to launch pad 39B March 16 for final processing.

A few miles from Discovery's hangar, technicians were busy Friday inspecting Atlantis's spent solid-fuel boosters, which fell by parachute into the Atlantic Ocean east of Jacksonville, Fla., Wednesday after the shuttle's spectacular 2:50 a.m. liftoff.

During Atlantis's fiery climb to space, long-range cameras showed what appeared to be chunks of material shooting away from the shuttle about one minute and 15 seconds into flight.

A spokesman for booster-maker Morton Thiokol Inc. said the material was made up of hot ''slag'' - ash from burned propellant - and that such chunks are routinely blasted out of shuttle rockets during ascent. He said the nighttime launching made the phenomenon more apparent than usual.

While the condition of the redesigned boosters will not be known until they can be taken apart and inspected, engineers said Friday no obvious problems had been noted so far.

(MARCH 3) UPI - Thick fog settled over much of the East early Saturday, reducing visibility to zero in parts of Kentucky, while a Pacific cold front spread rain and snow over northern California and Oregon.

The National Weather Service issued a dense fog advisory for southeast Kentucky through mid morning, with visibilities reduced to less than one-half mile and in some places, zero. Motorists were advised to use extreme caution.

Fog also enveloped New York, Philadelphia and Washington D.C., the NWS said. In the West, fog was reported in Los Angeles and Eugene, Ore.

A Pacific cold front spread rain from central California to Oregon, with snow in the higher elevations of the Sierra Nevada.

A snow advisory was posted for up to a foot of snow above 7,000 feet in the Lake Tahoe area and from 3 to 6 inches below that altitude. Cold air moving into the region was expected to drop the snowline from 6,000 feet to 3,000 feet by Sunday, the NWS said.

Heavy rain in southern Oregon began Friday, with Brookings getting 0.80 of an inch. Klamath Falls got 0.43 of an inch and Medford 0.27 of an inch. Rain spread as far north as Portland.

Fair skies and seasonable temperatures were reported across much of the rest of the nation.

Early morning temperatures were in the teens in the upper Great Lakes, 20s in the upper Midwest, and 30s across the Plains, Rockies and Northeast. It was in the 40s in the Middle Atlantic region, Pacific Northwest, Southwest and Gulf Coast. Temperatures reached the 50s in southern California and Southeast, while it was in the 60s and 70s in Florida.

URBANA, IL. (MARCH 3) UPI - More than two dozen schoolchildren attending a ''chemistry magic show'' at a university engineering school open house suffered burns and cuts when a glass beaker of molten iron and water exploded, authorities said Saturday.

Officials at the University of Illinois and at the three area hospitals reported 23 grade and high school students were treated for first and second degree burns and cuts from Friday's blast. None was hospitalized.

The accident occurred in a nearly full lecture hall during a demonstration by chemistry professor Steven Zumdahl, who was not hurt.

''There were no chemicals that got on anybody. Nobody got any eye injuries or anything like that,'' Zumdahl said. ''We had the front rows cleared because you always worry about that.''

The students screamed and ran when sparks, glass, molten iron and hot water sprayed the victims at the Noyes Laboratory building, witnesses said.

Among those hurt was Thaddeus Patterson of Hoffman Estates, who was attending the open house with his father.

''I was in one of the front rows and some of the stuff hit me,'' said the 10-year-old boy who suffered burns to his hand. ''It blew up and there were sparks everywhere.''

Thaddeus father said the ''thermite'' reaction is usually ''pretty spectacular.

''I'm a chemistry teacher,'' Eric Patterson said. ''I've done it 100 times myself. It's never exploded. It just gives off a lot of molten iron and sparks.

''I had a hole in my pants and I was probably about 20 rows back,'' Patterson added.

''It's a simple experiment,'' said Michael Latsch, a U of I student who watched the demonstration from the back of the room. ''It was some kind of freak (accident.) Something strange happened.

Fire officials said the cause of the explosion is under investigation.

FORT WAYNE, IN (MARCH 3) UPI - One person was hospitalized early Saturday when a bus chartered to take college students to Texas for a spring break trip overturned along Interstate 69, Indiana State Police said.

Investigators said the bus was transporting 46 students from Central Michigan University to Brownsville, Texas, when the accident happened about midnight 10 miles south of Fort Wayne.

The bus was chartered through R & R Tours, Inc., of Fond du Lac, Wis. There were two drivers on the bus.

Nine of the 48 occupants refused treatment and 38 others were treated at areahospitals for bumps and bruises and released.

Jennifer Rogers, 20, of Midland, Mich., was admitted to Lutheran Hospital at Fort Wayne for observation. Trooper Mark Hodges said doctors did not believe her injuries were serious.

The driver told investigators the bus ran off the road and flipped when he overcorrected his steering.

LONDON (MARCH 3) UPI - Lloyd Honeyghan took a verbal shot at Mark Breland after the weigh-in for their Saturday night World Boxing Association welterweight title fight, criticizing the champion for fighting a South African boxer in 1987.

Honeyghan fired the first salvo hours before the scheduled 12-round bout, which was set for 4:30 p.m. EST at Wembley Arena.

Honeyghan, bidding to became a three-time welterweight champion, said he lost respect for Breland when the New Yorker fought South African Harold Volbrecht for the vacant WBA title in 1987. Breland stopped Volbrecht to win the title, which Honeyghan had relinguished to protest the WBA's rating Volbrecht the No. 1 contender.

The WBA has since stopped ranking South African fighters because of that country's apartheid government.

''I've got a lot of respect for Breland as a fighter,'' Honeyghan said. ''But a lot of things he has done, I don't respect, like fighting Volbrecht. I'm going to make him pay for that.''

In the buildup to the bout, Breland accused Honeyghan of dirty fighting and the placid 1984 Olympic champion was upset at some things the challenger said.

''He's an idiot,'' Breland said earlier in the week.

Breland weighed 146 1/2 and Honeyghan, who was 10 minutes late after getting caught in traffic, weighed the division limit at 147. Breland's record was 26-1-1 and Honeyghan was 34-2 entering the bout.

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM (MARCH 3) UPI - NATO's top official, meeting Saturday with the Czech foreign minister, said he favors an early conference of NATO foreign ministers to discuss German unification.

''I personally think it would be a useful idea,'' NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner said after meeting with Czech Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier on German unity and European security.

The nearly two-hour meeting, described by Dienstbier as a ''warm discussion full of mutual understanding,'' was the second visit of a Warsaw Pact foreign minister to NATO headquarters, following last December's trip by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

Several NATO countries, particularly Italy and Holland, feel left out of the ''two-plus-four'' talks on German unity and seek an enhanced role in the process through their NATO membership.

The ''two-plus-four'' framework, agreed to last month in Ottawa, calls for initial talks between East and West Germany, followed by expanded talks involving the Big Four allies of World War II - France, Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union.

Several ambassadors of NATO countries have met informally, at times with Woerner, seeking an early meeting of the alliance's 16 foreign ministers to discuss German unification. The foreign ministers are not scheduled to meet again until June.

''It was not my idea,'' Woerner said of an early session of foreign ministers. ''It was an idea by several of our member countries and I personally favor that idea.

''I think we could have very useful discussions,'' he said, adding that no date had been set for any extraordinary session.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl is to meet with Woerner at NATO on Thursday. The visit, Woerner said, is to stress ''the importance he attributes to this alliance, the importance he attributes to consultation with all allies.''

''Those people who feel this process will only be limited to the two-plus-four process are wrong,'' said the NATO secretary general, a former West German defense minister.

Woerner reiterated NATO's desire to keep a unified Germany within NATO, but to not ''extend the military integration'' of the alliance into the territory of what is now East Germany.

Such a compromise, he said, ''is a very elegant solution and is a solution that really satisfies the security requirements of everyone,'' including the Soviet Union.

The Soviets, however, maintain a unified German state should be neutral, and their insistence has intensified in the past two weeks.

Woerner said opposition to a neutral Germany ''is a position that unites very clearly all allies, all 16 nations.''

The secretary-general said he told the Czech foreign minister that NATO, redefining itself after the past year's dramatic events in Eastern Europe, is ''really non-offensive.''

''We are really trying to get the idea across that this is really not a structure of the Cold War,'' he said. ''It is now an instrument of cooperation, of stability.

''We consider ourselves to be one of the pillars, if not the pillar, of a new security structure,'' Woerner said. ''In a time of instability, you need stability, and this alliance is not confronting anyone.''

KEY WEST, FL. (MARCH 3) UPI - A 17-year-old Cuban rode a windsurfing board from his country 60 miles on a 16-hour journey to freedom in the Florida Straits, where he was picked up by a Bahamanian freighter, officials said Saturday.

Lester Moreno Perez was in good physical condition Saturday after his trip which began at 8 p.m. Thursday and ended around noon Friday, about 30 miles from Key West, the Coast Guard said. The slender windsurfing instructor wore a navy blue wet suit and caught 20 mph winds on his trek.

''He's a wild man,'' said Coast Guard Petty Officer Richard Rodriguez. ''He jumped on his board when he thought the winds were best. By God, he was right.''

Rodriguez said Moreno Perez told him he studied the wind patterns from Cuba to the Keys and it appeared he was on course to land at Marathon in the middle Keys. He was picked up from the freighter by the Coast Guard and taken to Key West.

The Korean-speaking crew of the freighter had trouble explaining to the Coast Guard what happened so Moreno Perez got on the radio and talked to a Spanish-speaking officer.

''He said, 'No problem. I'm just windsurfing, going to see my family in Miami,''' Rodriguez said.

The 5-foot-6, 130-pound youth said he was given the Austrian-made, 3-meter sailboard by an East German tourist who ''wanted him to have his freedom '' Rodriguez said.

The wishbone boom a rider holds while sailing broke early Friday, forcing Moreno Perez to rig a makeshift device. He also used a seat sling for back support.

He was taken to the Krome Avenue Detention Center in Miami and officials said he probably would be turned over to relatives.

Officials said he was the 68th Cuban to be rescued at sea this year by the Coast Guard. He also was the first windsurfer from Cuba the Coast Guard could remember.

''You hear about them coming over on inner tubes and rafts,'' said Lt. Vincent DeLaurentis. ''But this is the first time I've ever heard of a sailboard.''

MOSCOW (MARCH 3) UPI - Four people died and at least 46 were injured when a bus plummeted into a river on a steep mountain pass in the Urals, the official Tass news agency said Saturday.

Tass did not say when the accident occurred but it said the bus tumbled into the Sim River near the Ural town of Minyar, about 150 miles west of Chelyabinsk, a regional capital of 1 million people.

''A passenger bus on its regular route fell into the river while making a turn on a steep slope by the bridge, killing four people,'' Tass said. ''Fourty-six passengers were hospitalized with injuries, Chelyabinsk authorities reported.''

Tass said authorities have started criminal proceedings, but it did not say against whom the proceedings were directed.

CANON CITY, CO. (MARCH 3) UPI - Six inmates broke out of a maximum security prison Friday but five were recaptured within hours, leaving one man - a murderer with a gun - still at large, officials said Saturday.

Prison Superintendant Benny Johnson said six men obtained cell keys, a pair of hand guns and a guard's uniform for the Friday breakout.

Using those materials, the inmates tied up several prison officials, seized a control room and then escaped into the prison yard through a loading dock near a food preparation area at about 5:30 p.m., Johnson said.

They ran to an outer prison fence but were spotted by guards and came under fire from a watchtower guard. They cut the fence and dashed out, but four of them were captured just outside the fence.

A fifth inmate, Stephen Kantrude, 20, was captured three hours later at a high school football stadium in Florence, a few miles southeast of Canon City.

Johnson said convict Terry Akers, 31, a convicted murderer who escaped once before and attempted to escape two other times, remained at large. He was believed to be hiding south of Florence, wearing a guard's uniform and armed with a handgun.

The names of the first four inmates captured quickly were not released.

Prison guard Charles Moschetti, 40, was shot in the chest during the breakout, Johnson said. Moschetti underwent emergency surgery Friday night and was listed in critical but stable condition.

The only other reported injury was to a guard who suffered a broken nose. None of the escapees were injured, Johnson said.

Akers, who had already been sentenced to life in prison on a murder conviction, received an additional life sentence in 1985 for the 1983 murder of another inmate who was stabbed 39 times.

After his second life sentence, Akers escaped the courthouse with two hostages and a prison van. He was captured about an hour later.

Kantrude was serving time for theft, burglary and a county jail escape conviction. He would have been eligible for parole in 1991.

CAPE TOWN, SOUTH AFRICA (MARCH 3) UPI - African National Congress stalwart Ray Alexander, who returned with her husband from 25 years in exile, Saturday praised the South African men and women whose battle against apartheid allowed her to come home.

But Alexander, 76, told reporters on her first full day back in South Africa that until political prisoners are released and the government talks with the ANC, no South African could consider themselves free.

''We are waiting to see the 340 comrades on Robben Island be freed, as well as those from all the other prisons,'' Alexander said.

The prisoners at Robben Island, where most of South Africa's political prisoners are held, began an indefinite hunger strike Monday in an effort to gain their release.

''Unless (the government officials) come down and talk with the ANC there will be no peace in our country, there will be no freedom in our country '' Alexander said. ''South Africa cannot be free until all of its people are free. But I still believe things can be changed.''

Alexander and her husband, Jack Simons, became the first exiles to return since President Frederik de Klerk lifted the 30-year ban on the ANC and the South African Communist Party. They returned Friday from Lusaka, Zambia, the ANC's headquarters in exile, but the question of when other exiles might return is unclear because of the fear of prosecution.

Simons told reporters the couple was only allowed into the country on a three-month visit ''at the end of which we are expected to go back.'' It was not clear whether the white couple would try to remain longer.

The Lithuanian-born Alexander was an active trade unionist from the 1930s and subsequently represented black South Africans in the country's whites-only Parliament. She also was a founder of the Federation of South Africa women.

In 1953, she was served with a restriction order effectively excluding her from Parliament. When Simons, 83, an academic at the University of Cape Town in the field of African government, also was restricted in 1965, the couple went into exile.

''Coming home is due to the fact that our people at home, the working men and working women, have been battling all the time against apartheid,'' Alexander said.

With larger banners of the Federation of the South African Women and the Food and Allied Workers Union nearby, Alexander urged the white working class in South Africa against following extremist and right-wing political groups. She called on them to join the black Congress of South African Trade Unions.

When asked if she ever expected to come back to South Africa, Alexander replied, ''I always believed we would come back. However, I did not think it would be so soon.''

ST. PAUL, MN. (MARCH 3) UPI - The six-member Trans-Antarctica expedition led by Minnesota adventurer Will Steger became the first to cross Antarctica without mechanized transportation Saturday after a harrowing last minute experience in which a Japanese crew member was lost in whiteout conditions for 14 hours.

The team arrived at the Soviet base of Mirnyy at 6:06 a.m. CST.

Soviet team member Victor Bovarsky, 38, led the team into the base and was greeted by 40 Soviets and a variety of journalists waiting with a banner that looked like one seen at a finish line.

Bovarsky was greeted by his wife, Natasha, who was flown from Leningrad to meet him.

Steger, 45, Ely, Minn., and Geoff Somers, 39, of Great Britain, followed with their dog teams. Keizo Funatsu, 32, of Japan, and Qin Dahe, 42, of China, brought up the rear.

When Steger and co-leader Jeanne-Louis Etienne, 42, of France, crossed into the base, they fell into each others arms and cried for five minutes, according to Jennifer Gasparini, a member of the team's support staff in St. Paul.

Etienne said ''it is wonderful to have finished. It has been a very difficult seven months.''

The Soviets celebrated the team's arrival with a traditional Russian greeting of bread and salt, followed by champagne toasts.

Gasparini said team members were invited to take a sauna but declined, saying they were too hot.

The temperature at their arrival was about zero degrees Fahrenheit and winds were blowing about 30 mph.

Gasparini said staff members in Paris watching the arrival on television thought the crew appeared healthy and not thin. Some had dark scabs on their faces from frostbite.

Funatsu appeared to have recovered somewhat from an ordeal during which he was lost just feet from his tent and was forced to dig a hole to keep from freezing. He looked a ''little stiff'' and had black marks on his face, Gasparini said.

She said Funatsu left his tent late Friday to check the dogs and was unable to find his way back because of winds of more than 70 mph that caused whiteout conditions. There were markers between the dogs and tents every 10 feet. Funatsu got very scared and dug himself a hole and stayed there, she said.

When Funatsu did not return within two hours, his fellow team members tied themselves together and searched for him for three hours until it became too dark. They resumed the search at 4:30 a.m. and found him in his hole. They heard him screaming ''I'm alive,'' Gasparini said.

''We all ran up to him, like the (Minnesota) Twins picture at the World Series, crying, and carried him back to the truck,'' Steger said, adding, ''Keizo has a strong will to live and that's why he survived.''

Funatsu said later he had always wanted to experience Antarctica at night and thought he could have survived one more night in his hole. He was wearing a double layer of thermal and pile longjohns and a Gore-Tex wind suit. He had on a hat and mittens, but wore only wool socks covered with Gore-Tex booties on his feet.

Early in the 4,000 mile trek across the frozen continent, Bovarsky fell through a crevasse.

Gasparini said the team members talked often about the dangers of going outside the tent alone and always took precautions.

The team began its trek July 16, 1989, from Minnesota and left Seal

Nunataks on the Antarctic peninsula July 27 after a stop in Cuba during which two of the team's 30 dogs died. Crew members were expected to leave Mirnyy aboard a Soviet scientific vessel Monday and sail to Wellington, New Zealand, a 12-day trip. They will arrive in St. Paul March 24.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Bonwit Teller, one of the nation's upscale clothing chains, may be forced to liquidate in the near future, Crain's New York Business reported in its Sunday issue.

The weekly business newspaper said the 16-unit Bonwit chain has been unable to find a viable boyout offer and ''most of the stores will probably be closed in a going-out-of -business sale and leases are likely to be auctioned.''

Crain's said a committee formed by Bonwit's creditors has rejected an offer from Pyramid Companies of Syracuse, N.Y., to buy five Bonwit outlets icluding the Manhattan flagship on 57th Street, just off Fifth Avenue.

Bonwit's is a subsidiary of the bankrupt Australian real estate firm, L.J. Hooker Corp. It lost $15.3 million in the 10 months ending Nov. 30 despite gross sales of $132 million. The chain employes 2,000 people, 600 of them in New York.

TURTLE CREEK, PA. (MARCH 3) UPI - A birthday party for an 8-year-old boy ended in tragedy Saturday when fire swept through one home and spread to two others, killing six people, five of them children.

Authorities withheld the names of victims until identities were confirmed and relatives notified. Three people were injured.

A fire official said five of the dead were children, ranging from 3 to 8 years. They had stayed overnight after a Friday evening children's birthday party. An adult male also died.

A second man was hospitalized in critical condition at West Penn Hospital burn unit in Pittsburgh. Two mothers were treated at Braddock Hospital and released, authorities said.

A spokesman for the Allegheny County Coroner's office, which was investigating along with a state fire marshal, described the scene as ''mass confusion.''

The fire, which broke out around 2:30 a.m., destroyed three homes in the neighborhood about 13 miles east of Pittsburgh. No cause was determined.

Neighbors said the children and several adults assembled for a birthday party, believed to have been for Joshua Harris, 8.

HONOLULU (MARCH 3) UPI - The union representing 9,000 workers at 11 major hotels in Waikiki and on other islands called a strike following the collapse of last-ditch negotiations early Saturday.

Union negotiators said they rejected the employers' last offer at 3 a.m. and unanimously authorized a strike. Members were told to go to their hotel to picket, but not to work.

The Waikiki hotels involved are the Hilton Hawaiian Village, Hyatt Regency Waikiki, Ilikai, Kahala Hilton, Sheraton Waikiki, Sheraton Moana Surfrider Princess Kaiulani, and Royal Hawaiian.

The strike also involves the Sheraton hotels on the islands of Kauai and Maui and the Kona Hilton on the island of Hawaii.

Honolulu police sent officers to monitor the proceedings as employees set up picket lines.

Tony Rutledge, leader of Local 5, the Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees Union, said the strikers might engage in sit-ins and other demonstrations after a few days.

''We were miles apart,'' said William Crawford, of the Council of Hawaii Hotels. ''The union was unrealistic in their expectations. They weren't in touch with reality.''

Crawford said the union demanded annual wage increases of more than 9 percent for three years, the hotels offered 5 percent annually for four years, a 7 percent increase with other benefits, he said.

''The hotels will operate providing the best service we can, which we think will be substantial,'' Crawford said. ''I think those hotels which have one or more restaurants may want to consolidate them. You may not get a choclate mint on your pillow at night.''

Management personnel will work some of the jobs and contingency plans also call for adding other employees, hired or transferred from other operations, he said.

Sheraton hotels began advertising for temporary employees immediately. Union officials have said they will be helped by Hawaii's low unemployment which has made it difficult for other employers to find workers.

The union has been pressing for a 15 percent surcharge on food and beverage items and a 5 percent surcharge on room rates, to be divided among the hotel workers.

The employers have refused to even consider the surcharges, which they said would be seen as another tourist tax on top of state hotel and excise taxes, making Hawaii less competitive with other resort areas.

SACRAMENTO, CA. (MARCH 3) UPI - Gov. George Deukmejian signed a bill Saturday making California the first state to require a 15-day wait before the purchase of a rifle or a shotgun.

Enactment of the new law, which goes into effect Jan. 1, 1991, ends one of the most controversial and intensely fought gun-control battles of the year. Its passage by the California Legislature signaled a major defeat for the National Rifle Association.

Deukmejian, a gun-control opponent until a crazed gunman killed five children on a Stockton, Calif., schoolyard a year ago, had been urged to sign the bill by law enforcement officials throughout the state.

''I believe this legislation is a reasonable measure that will keep more guns out of the hands of people who shouldn't have them,'' Deukmejian said in his weekly radio address.

The 15-day waiting period is designed to give the state Justice Department time to run background checks on potential buyers of so-called long guns. It is also meant to provide a ''cooling-off'' period that could prevent crimes committed in the heat of passion with just-purchased guns.

A waiting period and background check has been required for the purchase of a handgun in California since 1974.

Gun-control sentiment partly engendered by the Stockton shooting helped push through a measure Deukmejian signed into law last year that outlawed 56 types of military-style assault rifles. That measure, too, was vigorously opposed by gun lobbying groups like the NRA.

Deukmejian said he will push for legislation to shorten the waiting period criticized by some gun owners and dealers as an unnecessary inconvenience.

The bill prohibits anyone with a background of mental instability or a criminal record from taking possession of a gun. A previously passed lifetime ban against gun possession by convicted felons remains in effect.

The bill's author, Assemblyman Lloyd Connelly, D-Sacrmento, said he expects the waiting period and background check to result in about 10,000 people being denied a gun each year.

State Justice Department officials have estimated the new law will require 1 million background checks a year. Under the measure, the 15-day wait would be shortened to 10 days in 1996.

To satisfy legislators who feared the background checks would lead to de facto gun registration - anathema to many gun enthusiasts - the bill requires that forms used to process the checks be destroyed within 30 days.

RANCHO MIRAGE, CA. (MARCH 3) UPI - Hoping to head off further deterioration in economic relations, President Bush and Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu met Saturday to resolve trade disputes casting a shadow on their global partnership.

Bush and Kaifu opened their second day of discussions at the luxurious Morningside Country Club at 12:30 p.m. EST. Bush exchanged pleasantries with the Japanese prime minister but declined any comment to the press on their meetings.

But Japanese officials told reporters the two agreed during initial talks

Friday that the trade problems should be corrected quickly, though Kaifu offered no specific concessions in response to U.S. demands for more open markets.

Bush and Kaifu reaffirmed their mutual security obligations at an initial meeting Friday and planned to confront the issue of economic competition between allies Saturday at their unusual country club desert summit.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Friday that Bush assured Kaifu that U.S. force reductions would not affect ''deterrence or stability'' in Asia. A bid to have Japan pay more of the cost of its own defense was raised and greeted with agreement on ''the need for suitable arrangements for balanced cost-sharing,'' Fitzwater said.

Atmospherics dominated. Any doubt of that was dispelled by Fitzwater, who said Bush's goal was to ''lay a conceptual framework'' for the two countries to ''realize the full potential'' of their relationship.

Bush characterized Kaifu's 24-hour visit, coming after his re-election and a speech to parliament, as a ''significant gesture'' and ''strong indication'' of the importance of U.S.-Japanese relations.

No one predicted breakthroughs on a set of complex trade disputes rooted in cultural, economic and political differences.

Indeed, both sides worked to minimize expectations and separate the meeting from frustration produced by the sluggish pace of talks to remove structural causes of an almost $50 billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

However, neither side could deny the timeliness, coming as those negotiations near a deadline for interim progress and as the administration weighs retaliation and the initiation of new unfair-trade complaints against Japan.

Japan, branded an unfair trader last May under ''Super 301'' provisions of the 1988 trade law, could be hit with sanctions in the next few months if it refuses to open its markets to supercomputers, satellites and wood products.

Last September, Japan and the United States launched a separate Structural Impediment Initiative to explore fundamental reasons for their large trade imbalance.

The U.S. side wants Japan to increase public investment, encourage consumption, reform its land use policies, open its retail distribution system and end anti-competitive business practices to expand opportunities for U.S. companies.

Japan, on the other hand, contends the United States has its own bad habits to blame - including a low savings rate, short-sighted corporate strategies, over-regulation and inadequate research and development - for any loss of competitive edge.

The latest round ended without movement. U.S. officials looked to Kaifu to move the discussions forward after the Feb. 18 elections, which ended in victory for his Liberal Democratic Party, to give them reason to sound a note of optimism in the interim report due in April.

Before leaving Tokyo, Kaifu announced proposals that touched on some U.S. demands, including lower land costs and more emphasis on leisure to stimulate consumer demand for imports.

However, his pledge Friday to ''make every possible effort for progress,'' like recent Japanese promises of a more import-oriented economy, met with a certain degree of skepticism.

So too did the Dec. 19 announcement of an ''unprecedented'' program by Japan's venerable Ministry of International Trade and Industry to spur imports of manufactured goods through tax credits, tariff reductions and public promotion.

The question unanswered as Bush and Kaifu met among the playgrounds of the rich was whether Kaifu has the political courage to undertake the economic and behavioral changes sought by the United States and, if so, whether he has the political clout to deliver them - in time.

By passing over some old-guard members of his party in forming a new cabinet, Kaifu displayed an independence that to some indicated a possible readiness to address U.S. trade concerns and to others threatened the support he might need to succeed in such a gamble.

American resentment toward Japan has grown, fueled by the trade deficit and perceptions of a Japanese ''buy America'' spree that has snagged such high-profile holdings as Columbia Pictures and Rockefeller Center.

With greater tension still possible, the best hope was that Bush and Kaifu would inject political urgency into the current trade talks to calm protectionism brewing on Capitol Hill.

U.S. trade negotiators have vented public angst over Japanese intransigence in the talks and used the threat of retaliation to keep up the pressure for long-sought concessions.

''We'd rather see them take voluntary action that negates the need for that,'' Fitzwater said. ''But the law is the law.''

WASHINGTON (MARCH 4) UPI - Congress could cut off or slash $138.8 million in military aid and $546.2 million in economic aid to El Salvador but would run into stiff resistance from the administration, the General Accounting Office said Saturday.

In a report to Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., GAO - the congressional watchdog agency - said the money is in the ''pipeline'' and could still be aborted before reaching El Salvador.

Kennedy requested the information to back his call for a cutoff in aid to El Salvador pending steps to end the civil war, restore human rights and prosecute those responsible for the murder of six Jesuit priests last November.

''The massive U.S. aid still in the pipeline to El Salvador underscores the need to end our blank check policy toward that government,'' Kennedy said.

''Congress should appropriate no new military or economic aid for El Salvador and should cut off as much of the existing aid as legally possible,'' he said in a statement.

''For over a decade, we have urged the government of El Salvador to end its death squads and human rights abuses, but nothing ever happens,'' Kennedy added. ''Peasants, priests, politicians, nuns, workers and human rights activists continue to be murdered with impunity.

''Congress can help stop the killing in El Salvador by halting U.S. aid,'' he said. ''Cutting off future aid is not enough. We also need to cut off the aid in the pipeline. It is time to take that step.''

GAO said the $138.8 million in military aid consists of $44.6 million in 1990 money that has not been apportioned or obligated. Of the $546.2 million in economic aid, $193.4 million has not been obligated and $352.8 has been obligated but not spent.

GAO said Congress can vote to cut off or reduce both military and economic aid but some of the money would have to be used for terminating costs.

''U.S. government officials, however, urged that Congress not cut off aid to El Salvador,'' the report said.

GAO said Defense and State Department officials expressed concern that curtailment of military aid would signal a lack of support for the government fighting the Marxist-led insurgency.

The officials also said cutting off aid would lead to a resurgence of violence from the left and right, remove the leverage military aid provides in demands for reform, and jeopardize the ability of the military to protect critical areas and ''effectively support and maintain a stable government.''

''According to U.S. officials, the Salvadoran military has a 30-to-90 day supply of material and equipment,'' the report said. ''They indicated that a reduction in military aid would result in serious shortages in medical aid, rations, repair parts, ammunition and other soldier support items.'' Officials of the Agency for International Development told GAO that a cutoff of economic aid ''would disrupt assistance plans and ongoing projects, and could require major program strategy and structural changes.'' adv 6:30 p.m. EST

SPOKANE, WA. (MARCH 3) UPI - A 1,500-pound Hereford cow, apparently acting on her maternal instincts, crushed her owner to death when he tried to vaccinate her newborn calf, authorities said.

Jerry Lake, a real estate investor who owned a cattle ranch, was apparently charged by the angry cow as he tried to tag the calf's ear and vaccinate it, authorities said Friday. Lake was alone at the time.

The body of the 56-year-old rancher was found about 8 p.m. Thursday on his 260-acre Game Farm Ranch near Spokane by his business partner, Russ Fahland, and Dr. Philip Cleveland.

The cow believed responsible for Lake's death was guarding its calf a few feet away from Lake's crushed body near the snowy shore of the ranch's Dragoon Creek. Lake's glasses, a cattle vaccination syringe and a lariat were nearby.

Evidence suggested Lake was knocked to the ground, possibly after being butted by the cow, officials said.

Dr. Graham McConnell, Spokane county coroner, said Lake died from a crushed chest.

Lake, who grew up on a ranch, often talked about the danger of approaching a cow soon after it gave birth, Fahland said.

''He knew it was something you should never do alone and recognized that, talked about it, but didn't heed his own advice,'' Fahland said.

''Jerry knew the potentail for danger, but certain people - and he was one of them - thrive on danger,'' he said.

Lake left his office Thursday afternoon and drove home to the ranch, Fahland said, who lives opposite Lake's home on the ranch. Before sundown Lake set out alone to find two pregnant cows that had separated from the herd to give birth in isolated spots on the ranch.

When Lake didn't return, Fahland said he set out with a flashlight to track down his partner.

The cow and its calf rejoined the herd Friday afternoon and Fahland said the animal would not be destroyed for displaying normal maternal instincts.

BOSTON (MARCH 3) UPI - The congressional panel investigating the conduct of Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., has caught the chief witness against him in several lies and likely will only mildly reprove the liberal congressman for his dealings with the male prostitute, a published report said Saturday.

The Boston Globe, quoting unnamed congressional sources, said the House ethics committee has almost wrapped up its inquiry into whether Frank violated any House regulations and is expected to release a report as soon as next week.

Frank has admitted that he paid Stephen Gobie for sex in 1985 and then hired Gobie, using personal funds, as an aide. Frank said he fired Gobie in 1987 after learning the latter was running a prostitution service out of Frank's Washington home. Gobie alleges Frank knew of his activities.

The Globe said the ethics committee has detected several holes in testimony by Gobie, who sold his account of his relationship with Frank to Penthouse magazine and embarked on a publicity tour to promote the article.

''They have got Gobie nailed in several areas,'' one unidentified congressman told the newspaper.

Frank declined comment on the report and said he did not know what Gobie had told the commission.

Gobie has also charged Frank fixed his parking tickets while he was operating the sex-for-hire ring. Frank has said he paid for many parking tickets out of his own pocket and any tickets he had asked authorities to waive were accrued while Gobie was on congressional business.

The Globe, quoting sources, said the ethics committee had concluded that Gobie was not a credible witness.

One member of the House leadership told the newspaper that he does not believe the committee will make any moral judgments on Frank's relationship with the prostitute.

''I heard a long time ago that they were trying to get themselves out of the sex business,'' said the congressman, who asked not to be identified.

''As long as the activity didn't involve putting somebody on the payroll, taking somebody on a junket, using federal facilities or compromising oneself in a political sense, they weren't going to bother with it and would let constituents decide what should happen.''

(MARCH 3) UPI - A bipartisan congressional commission has taken its first step toward its task of resolving the problem of high health costs in America.

Two years after its inception, the Pepper Commission yesterday approved a plan to provide all Americans with access to health care.

Under the terms of the measure, a mixture of public and private money would be used to bring about universal coverage... as well as set up a federal program to cover costs of long-term care, such as in a nursing home.

However, the panel failed to address how the government would foot its 66-BILLION-dollar portion of the estimated 86-BILLION-dollars a year necessary to finance the program.

The absence of a way to pay the government's share of the bill caused Representative Pete Stark, a California Democrat, to describe the commission's work as a ''hoax.''

Ohio Republican Willis Gradison also criticized the plan, saying it would cost each tax-paying American 750 dollars.

Authorities in Spanaway, Washington, say at least 11 junior high students were hospitalized when the outdoor bleachers they were on collapsed.

The students were among hundreds of Cedar Crest Junior High School pupils who climbed the bleachers after officials evacuated them from the school because of a bomb threat.

A spokesman for the Pierce County Sheriff's Department says the aluminum bleachers appeared to have collapsed because of missing braces. Further investigation by police revealed similar vandalism had occurred at three other schools in Cedar Crest's district.

A teacher who asked NOT to be identified says the bleachers frequently have been the target of vandals in the past. Several students added that they had been told in the past to stay off the bleachers because of possible safety problems.

(MARCH 3) UPI - Panamanian President Guillermo Endara says he'll continue a Lenten fast until his ''conscience dictates.''

Three days into his vigil, Endara denies that his fast is politically motivated. Instead, he says... in his words... ''It is basically an act of commiseration with the people of Panama who are suffering.''

The U-S-backed successor to ousted dictator Manuel Noriega is camping out in a wing of the Metropolitan Cathedral in Panama City. Endara says the ''hunger and pain'' of his compatriots prompted him to vacate the presidential palace and begin the fast.

But he says his country is NOT hopeless.

He claims Panama has solutions to its woes. But he emphasized that only with financial support can those ideas be realized.

Although the United States has promised up to one-BILLION dollars in aid to the Central American nation, NONE of the money has materialized.

A huge amount of the Dominican Republic's foreign debt is being converted into ''conservation bonds'' in the largest debt-for-nature swap ever to occur in one country.

The Nature Conservacy says the Dominican Republic and an environmental coalition in the Caribbean nation agreed to convert up to 80-Million dollars of debt into the bonds.

A Conservancy spokesman says the plan represents a significant infusion of money into the Dominican Republic's conservation agenda.

Under the agreement, interest paid on the bonds will pay for environment projects such reforestation... land acquisition and management of a national park.

The swap represents 10 percent of the Dominican Republic's foreign debt and will take place over four years.

AUSTIN, TX (MARCH 3) UPI - The Board of Directors of the State Bar of Texas unanimously refused Saturday to take a position on the issue of abortion and urged the American Bar Association to rescind its pro-choice stance.

Larry Fitzgerald, director of communications for the state bar, said the 43-member board passed a resolution on the controversial subject just before noon.

''The resolution, essentially, says the State Bar of Texas has no position on the pro-life or pro-choice issue,'' Fitzgerald said. ''In the resolution we specifically say that we take no position out of respect for the diversity of opinions of the members ... on this issue.''

The resolution also asked the ABA to reconsider the controversial pro-choice resolution passed Feb. 13 by the ABA's House of Delegates in Los Angeles. Some 100 members of the ABA have resigned or threatened to resign because of the ABA position on the issue.

''The thing is, it's such an emotional issue,'' Fitzgerald said. ''It cuts across all political parties.''

Richard Collins, the ABA's director of policy and presidential communications, described the February resolution as ''pro-privacy rights'' rather than a ''pro-abortion'' stance, but the defecting members contended the ABA should take no position at all. The resolution will come up for reconsideration at the ABA's annual meeting in Chicago in August.

Fitzgerald said the Texas organization's resolution passed Saturday urged that the ABA rescind the resolution at that meeting.

''We are asking the ABA House of Delegates to reconsider that action at their annual meeting in August in Chicago,'' he said. ''It's my understanding that the item is already on the agenda for the August meeting for reconsideration.''

DETROIT (MARCH 3) UPI - Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., said Saturday that prospects are good that clean air legislation unveiled last week in the Senate can be modified to make it more palatable to the auto industry.

Dingell made the comment to reporters after addressing the Democratic State Central Committee on recent developments in Eastern Europe.

The clean air compromise, announced Thursday, would reduce auto pollution and power plant emissions that have been linked with acid rain while setting new standards for airborne toxic pollutants from a wide range of businesses.

Dingell, who chairs the House Energy and Commerce Committee, called the compromise ''part of a long and difficult process.''

''It is far better than the original Senate bill. It needs some perfection to be as good as the bill that was assembled by President Bush and his administration or indeed as good as'' legislation pending in the House, he said.

Dingell's committee is scheduled to take up the House legislation the week of March 12 with an eye toward bringing it to the House floor in early spring.

Dingell said the Senate proposal suffers from ''major problems in terms of workability,'' adding that ''some of the burdens that are imposed on industry ... go far beyond any economic benefits or any environmental benefits that can be anticipated.''

The veteran Democrat criticized the proposed second round of tail pipe emissions standards that would be imposed after the year 2000 if the air in 11 of 27 key cities failes to meet government standards.

Dingell said standards in the House legislation ''go right to the limit of technological capability,'' adding, ''I think that's as far as we ought to compel industry to go.''

Dingell said the measure's acid rain provisions would be ''unduly harsh upon the Midwest'' although they would not directly affect Michigan.

NEW YORK (MARCH 3) UPI - Los Angeles Clippers rookie Jay Edwards has been suspended for the remainder of the season for failing a random drug test, the NBA and the Players Association announced Saturday.

Edwards, a guard from Indiana, is the third player suspended since the NBA began random testing of rookies in training camp in 1988 and throughout this season. Earlier this year, Stanley Brundy of the New Jersey Nets and Roy Marble of the Atlanta Hawks were suspended for failing tests.

Under an amendment to the NBA's anti-drug agreement that was adopted last November, all rookies are subject to random testing three times during the season.

If a rookie fails one of these tests, he is suspended for the remainder of the season. If Edwards complies with the after-care provisions of his treatment, he will be eligible to play next season at the discretion of the NBA's drug counselors.

BALTIMORE (MARCH 3) UPI - Tom Clancy, author of ''The Hunt for Red October,'' has been asked by national Republican leaders to get in the hunt for Maryland's 1st District congressional seat, The Baltimore Sun reported Saturday.

Clancy, a registered Republican and resident of Calvert County, along the Chesapeake Bay, has been asked by national GOP leaders to consider a bid against Rep. Roy Dyson, D-Md.

The noted author, whose acclaimed book was made into a just-released movie starring actor Sean Connery, did not rule out the possibility of a political bid.

''It certainly deserves consideration, civic duty and all that,'' Clancy said, noting that because of the premiere of the movie adaptation of his book and related appearances, he ''has not had any time to consider'' the race.

Clancy was asked to run against Dyson, a five-term Democrat, two weeks ago in Princeton, N.J., during a GOP conference, The Sun reported.

Rep. Vin Weber, R-Minn., announced at a dinner attended by the author that Republicans want Clancy to run against Dyson, whom they see as beatable.

''Obviously, we'd love to see him run,'' National Republican Central Committee spokesman John Roberts said. ''He's articulate and popular.''

But, state GOP chairwoman Joyce Terhes and others said there are already many qualified Republican candidates announced for the primary.

''We have seven very good candidates for the 1st Congressional District,'' said Terhes, who repeated the statement when asked by the newspaper if she thought Clancy should run.

Dyson has been viewed as defeatable since his narrow victory in the last election over virtually unknown challenger Wayne Gilchrest and the controversial death of his chief of staff, Tom Pappas.

Pappas lept to his death in New York after published reports alleged he made inordinate demands of male staffers.

Clancy's novels, which also include ''Red Storm Rising'' and ''Clear and Present Danger,'' focus on superpower rivalries and sophisticated weaponry and are widely popular with readers of spy novels.

VIENNA (MARCH 3) UPI - A U.N.-sponsored relief agency has lashed out at Jerusalem over a series of raids by Israeli authorities on refugee health centers in the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip.

The Vienna-based U.N. Relief Works Agency, in a statement released late Friday, said its clinics in Gaza have been violated five times in the past month by Israeli civil authorities backed by soldiers.

In one instance, troops entered a clinic in the Nuseirat refugee camp and proceeded to ransack records, search and interrogate U.N. staffers and throw medical books to the ground, the agency said.

Other raids targeted clinics at the Bureij and Rafah camps, prompting the U.N. agency to fire off three letters of protest to the Israeli government.

The statement said the agency would ''continue to protest violations of its premises and the searching of official United Nations files, and to ask the Israeli authorities to ensure that such incidents do not recur.''

REDDING, Calif. (MARCH 4) UPI - A striking Greyhound bus driver was crushed to death Saturday by a company bus leaving a Northern California depot, police and witnesses said.

Robert Waterhouse, 59, was rushed to the Redding Medical Center where he was pronounced dead Saturday morning after a Greyhound bus hit and pinned him against a wall, police Officer Steve Fiddler said.

The 30-year company employee was one of dozens of pickets demonstrating at the depot in the second day of a strike by their union in protest of stalled contract talks with Greyhound. Early Friday, some 9,000 Greyhound union employees nationwide walked out on the nation's largest intercity bus line, serving nearly 10,000 communities in the United States.

The bus was turning onto a city street from an alley behind the station when it apparently sideswiped a wall, catching Waterhouse, who was crushed between the wall and the right side of the vehicle.

Fiddler said it was possible the driver did not realize he had struck anyone.

The driver was identified as Theodore Graham, 42, of Portland, Ore., a temporary substitute hired to help drive buses during the strike. He drove on while being chased by two pickup trucks of screaming union pickets. One witness said the driver was ''really scared.''

The bus apparently collided with one of the pickups, causing minor damage and no injuries. However, it kept going, traveling about 15 miles on a nearby freeway until the driver flagged down a California Highway Patrol officer, Fiddler said.

''He did drive away from the scene,'' Fiddler said. ''He attempted to flag down an officer while he was still driving, and then once the officer pulled over, he pulled over.''

Graham was questioned at the police station and released Saturday afternoon. He was not cited but police were still gathering statements before ruling out whether criminal charges would be filed.

Ironically, Waterhouse was interviewed by a local television station Friday night expressing his concern about the insufficient training given to the strikebreakers.

The union striking Greyhound called for a probe into the death of Waterhouse.

''We call on authorities to investigate this tragic incident with all due haste,'' said Edward Strait, president of Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions in Phoenix. ''We urge Greyhound Lines Inc. to provide authorities and the public with all relevant information regarding this driver's previous driving and safety records.''

Company President Frank Schneider said Graham was not at fault.

''The company as a whole feels an extreme amount of grief, but it's an accident,'' he said. ''It was not an act of violence. It was not an act of malicious activity, and it's an unfortunate thing that happened.''

Mary Johnston, a waitress at a restaurant across the street from the Greyhound depot, said the bus ran a stop sign and took a sharp turn at a corner before hitting Waterhouse.

''The bus was coming around the corner and he didn't stop for the stop sign or anything like that,'' she said. ''There was a picketer standing over there and the bus took a corner sharp and he hit the guy.''

Johnston said the bus then knocked a pickup truck out of the way that was attempting to stop it and drove away from the scene.

''Everybody was trying to stop the bus, saying, 'You killed him, you killed him,' and banging on the bus,'' she said. ''He (Graham) was really scared.''

Japan's Prime Minister Kaifu promised today to ''firmly tackle'' the causes of the huge trade imbalance between the United States and Japan.

The comment came at the close of Kaifu's 24-hour trade summit with President Bush at Rancho Mirage, California. Both Kaifu and Bush promised to attack the causes of economic tension between their two nations.

A major cause of that tension, at least on the American side, is the

The White House says Bush told Kaifu about that sentiment, but did NOT do it in ''any threatening context.''

A pair of French skiers were rescued today after spending six days trapped in a blizzard on Mont Blanc.

34-year-old Philippe Bensimon and 31-year-old Marie-Antoinette Meynet have been hospitalized in Chamonix. Both were suffering from severe hypothermia. Bensimon is reported in ''very serious'' condition after his body temperature dropped to 78 degrees. He also suffered severe frostbite on both feet. Meynet is reported in satisfactory condition, but may yet lose an ear to frostbite.

The pair survived the blizzard in a makeshift igloo constructed with the aid of their skis. They ate snow and chewing gum for sustenance.

Bensimon and Meynet disappeared last Sunday on an off-trail ski outing. Blizzard conditions during the week hindered rescue attempts.

(MARCH 3) UPI - A mutinous governor in the Philippines has attacked a northern provincial capital and taken several army officials hostage.

Governor Rodolfo Aguinaldo seized a hotel just before dawn Sunday, taking the military officers hostage along with a number of bodyguards, reporters and a government secretary. The officers had been sent to seek Aguinaldo's surrender.

Violent incidents are reported around the country in the second day of a strike against Greyhound bus lines. In the most tragic incident, a striking worker was crushed to death today by a company bus leaving a northern California depot. Authorities say a non-union replacement worker was driving the bus that crushed 59-year-old Robert Waterhouse against a wall. NO charges have been filed against the driver.

Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu is vowing to reduce the huge U-S-Japanese trade imbalance and pursue a ''global partnership'' to promote democracy and market economies. (MARCH 3) UPI - An opposition leader in West Germany says social and economic problems linked to German reunification could escalate following elections in East Germany March 18th. One such problem might be a huge increase in the number of East Germans crossing into West Germany. ADDIS ABABA (MARCH 4) - Ethiopia's interim parliament late Saturday announced a special decree relaxing rigid restrictions on the sale of private housing and the size of land permissable under the law for home owners.

The decree lifts the unpopular freeze on the sale of private homes, their transfer under loan, lease or inheritance, in force for many years.

Existing legislation allowed the state first choice to buy any houses for sale, and at prices valued by its own assessors. The state also retained the right to nationalize any home with a floor space of 180 square metres.

The new decree, reported by the Ethiopian News Agency (ENA), permits individuals to dispose of their property as they wish in the open market and also lifts the ceiling on the size of urban land available to private home builders.

The state, which owns all land, had issued a proclamation in 1986 limiting home owners to 250 square meters in the cities, specifying a maximum 70 sq. metres for the floor space.

The new legislation raises the land area to as much as 650 sq. metres in the low-density rural towns and to 500 sq. metres in cities with populations of 250,000 or more.

The agency said the council of state deliberated the problem on February 21 after hearing a report by Housing and Urban Development Minister Tadesse Kidane Mariam, who had been instructed to undertake a study of the case last September.

The decree was not linked to other reforms promised by the authorities following a politburo meeting on Friday.

ENA reported earlier on Saturday that the politburo had drawn up an "appropriate strategy" in the light of the changing international situation and conditions at home.

TOKYO (MARCH 4) - Senior Bank of Japan officials on Sunday lauded negotiators at Japan-U.S. talks Friday and Saturday for pledging cooperation in stabilizing foreign exchange markets.

"Talking about currency issues at the summit talks should appeal to the markets that the two countries are totally against the drastic and rapid fall of the yen against the dollar," a top central bank official said.

He added that the agreement on cooperation in exchange markets would help dispel speculation that Washington and Tokyo are divided over the yen-dollar rate.

The official said, "We will expand the scale of our market intervention," or sell more dollars if the greenback rises further against the yen.

The dollar rose to more than 150 yen Friday in Tokyo at one stage for the first time in eight months before closing at 149.75 yen.

The Bank of Japan reportedly sold as many as seven billion dollars last week to shore up the yen but with little effect.

Currency dealers were skeptical about the impact of the agreement, saying that market sentiment toward the greenback remained bullish.

One dealer said the strength of the two countries' commitment "will be tested on the market when it reopens on Monday."

NEW DELHI (MARCH 4) - Indian Army and paramilitary troops were enforcing an indefinite curfew Sunday in Kashmir where 36 people have been reported killed since Thursday in a Moslem separatist campaign.

Residents said by telephone from Srinagar that troops in battle fatigues were cruising the deserted streets of the northern state's summer capital in vehicles fitted with light machine-guns.

Suspected Moslem militants were being arrested in house-to-house searches, the residents said. There were also reports of an acute shortage of medicine in the city's hospitals.

"The army is everywhere," said one resident. "There is no life here. The city is totally shut."

The round-the-clock curfew imposed early Friday shut Srinagar's mainly Moslem population of 800,000 indoors.

Since Friday, 27 other cites and towns of the mainly Moslem Kashmir valley have also been brought under curfew, enforced by army troops and paramilitary forces with orders to shoot violators on sight.

The residents said that soldiers and paramilitary Border Security Force (BSF) troopers were continuing a crackdown on Moslem separatists campaigning for secession in the border state of Jammu and Kashmir.

Kashmir government officials could not be reached for comment. It was not known how many more suspects had been detained in the security sweeps which had resulted in more than 80 arrests by late Saturday on top of 500 already held prior to the latest flareup.

The Press Trust of India (PTI) said that Srinagar and the other areas under curfew were calm Sunday.

The curfew was imposed after 34 people were killed and some 100 injured when security forces fired to break up several thousand Moslems who took to the streets of Srinagar Thursday chanting anti-India slogans, according to an unofficial toll.

The marchers were demanding a U.N.-supervised plebiscite to determine the future of Kashmir, the only Moslem-dominated state in Hindu-majority India.

RIYADH (MARCH 4) - Lebanese President Elias Hrawi arrived in Saudi Arabia on Sunday and immediately began talks with King Fahd to examine how the kingdom can help beef up Lebanon's army, officials said.

Mr. Hrawi was expected to brief King Fahd on the measures he was planning to take to extend his authority across the Lebanese territory, including embattled Christian regions east and north of Beirut, the sources said.

The Syrian-backed Lebanese president and King Fahd will also "study ways of reinforcing the legal army by granting it Saudi military assistance," they added.

Mr. Hrawi, accompanied by his prime minister Selim al-Hoss, were having talks with King Fahd in the northeastern Saudi locality of Hafr al-Batan ahead of planned visits to Algiers and Rabat for talks with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid and King Hassan II of Morocco.

The three Arab states last year drew up a peace plan aimed at ending Lebanon's 15-year conflict and which facilitated the election of Mr. Hrawi last November.

Mr. Hrawi has said he would seek renewed Arab and international backing as well as financial help to reconstruct war-torn Lebanon and beef up 5,000 army troops loyal to him.

His trip comes as the Lebanese Forces Christian militia and army troops loyal to military leader Michel Aoun - who does not recognise Mr. Hrawi's authority - observed a shaky truce in their 33-day war for supremacy following overnight and dawn artillery exchanges.

ABIDJAN (MARCH 4) - Ivory Coast President Felix-Houphouet Boigny has agreed indefinitely to postpone implementation of drastic austerity measures after unprecedented anti-government protests, reliable sources said Sunday.

People needed more information on the programme, according to regional secretaries in the ruling Democratic Party (PDCI), summoned to a special executive committee session here late Saturday, a day after police used teargas and water cannon to break up large student-led demonstrations against Mr. Houphouet-Boigny. About 100 people were arrested.

The government's 'Koumoue Plan', named after Finance Minister Moise Koumoue Koffi, previews cuts in civil service salaries of between 15 and 40 per cent, a "social charge" of 10 per cent on private sector income, offset by a reduction in electricity and water rates.

The policy-making national council of the PDCI had been due to meet Monday, but senior party officials on Saturday won a postponement from the 84-year-old president, arguing that more time was needed to inform the population and discuss ways to deal with the economic crisis.

They also demanded cuts in prices of essential commodities such as rice, millet, soap, fuel, medicines, cement and schoolbooks, with help for the least well-off.

Meanwhile, the West African country's main opposition leader, Laurent Gbagbo, on Saturday said, "the Koumoue plan spells death for the Ivory Coast. The economic framework won't be able to take it today."

Mr. Gbagbo, head of the non-recognized Ivorian People's Front (FPI), told a press conference: "Slashing purchasing power is an anti-economic move. The FPI backs the workers protesting against a drop in their wages."

Careful not to call directly for demonstrations - the authorities closed schools and universities late Friday after the mass protest - Mr. Gbagbo said: "We support the people's demands, and if they demonstrate, we will join them."

MORONI (MARCH 4) - People in the Comoro Islands started going to the polls Sunday to elect a successor to president Ahmed Abdallah, mysteriously murdered in November last year.

Mr. Abdallah's interim successor, Said Mohamed Djohar, representing the fomerly single ruling UDZIMA (Comoran Union for Progress) party, is up against seven opposition candidates.

The first round of the election was postponed from February 18 when the opposition accused Mr. Djohar of rigging the vote, and finally begun two hours late on Sunday after a delay in getting the electoral lists out.

Two opinion polls in February said the most favoured candidate was former parliamentary speaker Mohamed Taki, with a little over 18 per cent of those asked saying they would vote for him.

Second in one poll came Mr. Djohar, followed by Abbas Yussuf with his MPD (Democratic Movement) and Said Ali Kemal, head of the Shuma party and grandson of the last Sultan of the Indian Ocean islands.

But Mr. Djohar came only fifth in the other opinion poll.

Others competing are Ali Mroudjae with his Democracy and Progress Party (PCDP), former vice-president Mohamed Hassanaly of the Mohelian People's Front, Mohamed Ali Balia and his Socialist Party (PASOCO), and Mustapha Said Sheikh, leader of the Democratic Front.

Some 285,000 voters were on the electoral rolls. The population of the Islamic republic is of mixed descent - Melano-Polynesians, Arabs, Africans, Indonesians, Indians and Portuguese, French and Dutch settlers.

The Comoros, under the late Mr. Abdallah, declared unilateral independence from France in 1975, after a referendum that left Mayotte the only island in the Indian Ocean archipelago willing to remain a French territory.

Blame for Mr. Abdallah's murder was widely pinned on French mercenary Bob Denard, head of the presidential guard, but Mr. Denard strongly denied any part in the affair, before being forced to leave for South Africa after French troops intervened.

The interior ministry in Moroni was expected to release the first election results overnight Sunday.

SOFIA (MARCH 4)- Some 30,000 miners have gone on strike across Bulgaria, accusing the government of failing to respect an agreement which ended a walkout in January, union officials said Sunday.

The officials, from a strike committee formed by the independent trade union Podkrepa, said the government was not adhering to the January 29 agreement.

That accord reduced the number of hours miners worked a week from 35 to 30 and provided for no recriminations against miners who took part in strikes.

Podkrepa said that miners wearing their working clothes would begin an indefinite sit-in starting Monday outside the offices here of the State Council and Council of Ministers.

Another source warned that other workers could join the strike to back up the miners

The union officials said that work would continue at vital mines to ensure a steady supply of charcoal.

Prime Minister Andrei Loukanov said at a press conference Friday that the demands of the miners were "justified," and that the government would take the necessary measures.

He called on workers to "think of the interests of society" because "the economy is on the edge of the abyss."

According to the Communist Party newspaper Rabotnitchesko Delo, there have been 295 strikes across the country in the past few months.

KABUL (MARCH 4) - Afghan rebels fired three cluster rockets at residential targets here Sunday, killing four civilians and wounding 15 others, a government spokesman here said.

The deadliest slammed into a new housing project in the Wazirabad area in western Kabul, causing all four fatalities and wounding 11.

Another cluster bomb landed in the same part of the city and a third hit farmland east of Kabul airport. Two people were wounded in each case.

The spokesman described the rockets as U.S-manufactured cluster rockets packed with tiny percussion mines that explode on impact, adding that they were "anti-civilian" missiles but capable of causing heavy military damage.

The government maintains a news blackout on hits on military targets.

The latest rockets hit Kabul a day after three similar missiles killed a child and wounded eight other civilians.

JERUSALEM (MARCH 4) - Israeli Arabs are to send a petition to Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to protest the expected emigration to Israel this year of thousands of Soviet Jews, a petition organizer said Sunday.

Mohammad Kayal, who warned that massive emigration would increase discrimination against the 750,000 Israeli Arabs, said 4,000 signatures had been gathered and that more would be sought from residents of northern Israel and Nazareth, where the community is strong.

"The emigration of Soviet Jews is taking place at the expense of the Palestinian people and will increase the racial discrimination already affecting Israeli Arabs," said Mr. Kayal, citing from the petition.

The signature drive is being organized by the Palestinian nationalist group Abna' al-Balad (Sons of the Nation), whose leaders say the petition reflects deep frustration felt by Israel's Arab community, where unemployment stands at 20 per cent against nine per cent for Israeli Jews.

Nazareth Mayor Tawfik Ziyad, a member of Israel's Communist Party, said Soviet Jews arriving in Israel would provoke further unemployment, with the Arab community hardest hit.

Yossi Olmert, head of Israel's state-run press office, charged Sunday that the petition was part of an "international campaign orchestrated by the Palestine Liberation Organisation against the immigration process."

Right-wing parliamentarians urged the government to outlaw Abna' al-Balad, which has several hundred members.

NICOSIA (MARCH 4) - Sudanese junta leader Omar Hassan el-Beshir announced that his government and Libya envisaged a "unity plan" as he ended a 48-hour visit to Tripoli on Saturday, Libya's JANA news agency said.

Gen. Beshir added that he was "most satisfied with the talks he had" with Libyan leader Colonel Moamer Kadhafi, JANA added, without giving any details of the meetings, in a report monitored here.

The unity proposal was "a first step towards unity in the Arab world", according to Gen. Beshir.

He had on Friday decreed the free movement of citizens between the two countries, telling the Libyan People's Congress (national assembly) that the plan was for "unity in policy on culture, education, economics, security and information".

The general also announced the planned establishment of political, ministerial and technical commissions, with a secretariat, to "reinforce steps towards unity between our two brother nations".

Gen. Beshir seized power in a coup on June 30 last year, ousting the civilian coalition government of Sadek el-Mahdi.

Sudanese Ministers and political party leaders were initially jailed but have since been placed under house arrest, while their parties remain banned, as do trade unions and professional associations.

Since January, there have been renewed heavy clashes between government troops and rebels of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), which has been fighting successive regimes to end Khartoum's Moslem domination over mainly Christian and animist south Sudan.

In Khartoum late Saturday, Chief of Staff General Ishak Ibrahim Omar said government soldiers had destroyed four rebel battalions and two SPLA camps on the road from Malakal in Upper Nile Province southwards to Juba.

The SPLA has taken a recent offensive close to Juba, Sudan's southern capital, in Equatoria Province.

WARSAW (MARCH 4) - Mass graves containing the remains of between 200 and 1,000 people killed by Stalin's secret police in August 1944 have been found in a forest in southeastern Poland, the PAP news agency said Sunday.

The news agency said the mass graves were discovered near the town of Jastkowic in the Tarnobrzeg region.

It said that according to elderly residents of the town, they contain the remains of Polish civilians and Polish troops killed by Stalin's NKVD after the Red Army entered Poland.

The graves probably also contained the remains of some Germans, PAP said. It did not elaborate.

The news agency said that most of the Poles buried there were apparently members of the resistance.

One resident said that the NKVD had built a crude prison near his farm, keeping hundreds of people in huge holes dug in the ground.

After interrogation by the NKVD, most of the prisoners were taken to the forest by truck, where they were killed, residents said.

The Warsaw press has reported the discovery of similar mass graves of Polish victims of the NKVD in other areas of Poland.

BANGKOK (MARCH 4) - Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF) guerrillas said Sunday they had full control of five villages located near strategic Svay Chek village.

Government forces had seized control of Svay Chek from the KPNLF last week.

"The area surrounding Svay Chek is now under our full influence," said the report, received here Sunday and issued by KPNLF spokesman Serei Sopheak at Boeung Trakuon village, a KPNLF stronghold in northwestern Cambodia.

The group said that on Thursday, some 1,000 of its troops "harassed enemy positions" at Ta Mar, Chhouk, Makak, Kan Nap and Kakaoh.

Four guerrillas were killed and five wounded in four hours of combat, the KPLNF said, but there was no report available on government casualties. Two ammunition trucks and a Soviet-made T-54 tank were reportedly destroyed.

Svay Chek, seized by the non-communist KPNLF guerrillas in December, was retaken in a surprise attack by a government forces on February 23. Some 1,000 KPNLF fighters were reportedly driven from the area.

The town is located on Highway 69, which runs parallel to the Thai border some 20 km (12 miles) inside Cambodia, and is about 18 km (11 miles) north of Sisophon, the seat of northwestern Banteay Meanchey province and a key regional supply depot for government forces.

The statement also quoted escaped villagers from Smach, 30 km (18 miles) east of Sisophon, as saying that on Friday the entire village was "forced to move to Bos Sbov," some 11 km (6.8 miles) northeast of Sisophon.

It said that "all the men in the village had their arms tied up" and were forced to undergo "violent interrogation" for having supported KPNLF troops.

"The KPNLF strongly condemns this barbaric retaliation measure taken by Vietnamese-Heng Samrin troops against innocent civilian people," the report said.

Mr. Heng Samrin is president of the Phnom Penh government, which was installed by Vietnam shortly after it invaded Cambodia in 1978 to overthrew a Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge regime.

Vietnam announced in September that it had withdrawn all its troops, a statement rejected by the guerrilla coalition.

NEW DELHI (MARCH 4) - Thirteen people have died in fresh violence linked to Sikh separatism in the northern Indian state of Punjab, while a Sikh leader was murdered in the south, the Press Trust of India (PTI) said Sunday.

Five suspected Sikh militants were killed late Saturday in two separate gunbattles blamed on internecine feuds among rival Sikh separatist factions in the troubled state, PTI said.

Both the shootouts occured in Amritsar, the centre of Sikh militancy that flared in 1983 as a result of a separatist campaign to create a Sikh homeland called Khalistan in Punjab.

The news agency said a Sikh religious leader was killed late Saturday by two unknown Sikhs in southern Andhra Pradesh state capital Hyderabad.

The killers carrying daggers attacked and killed temple management committee vice president Dayal Singh, PTI said, without elaborating.

In Punjab, Sikh assassins also killed two government guards in Amritsar city and gunned down a paramilitary trooper in an ambush in the Bhikiwind area, PTI said.

Four corpses, one a woman, were found with bullet marks in Amritsar Sunday, and the police said the killings appeared to be linked to separatist-led violence.

PTI said the 13th murder by Sikh militants occured late Saturday in the frontier Punjab district of of Ferozepur, taking the year's toll of separatist-linked deaths in the northern state to some 200.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 4) - A new Daniel Ortega has emerged in Nicaragua, U.S. Vice President Dan Quayle said Sunday.

"It appears that we do have a new Daniel Ortega that is truly committed to democracy," said Mr. Quayle on CBS Television after hearing President Ortega on the same program say that "Democracy in Nicaragua has won."

The two leaders were interviewed on Nicaragua's next steps in its transition to democracy since Mr. Ortega's defeat a week ago by the U.S.-backed National Opposition Union (UNO).

Mr. Ortega said he would turn over leadership within the framework of the constitution but he did not say directly whether he would turn over control of the Sandinista police and armed forces to the new government under Violeta Chamorro April 25.

"I don't have an army here. I don't have a police force here. Here we have an army and a Ministry of the Interior that are national institutions," Mr. Ortega said.

"We have a constitution and I am going to respect that constitution," Mr. Ortega said. "The constitution is the one that orders that I turn over the power to the government that is elected."

Mr. Ortega called on the United States to give to Nicaragua and also to back off.

"What we have done is get ahead of ourselves in order to bring peace to Nicaragua, so that the United States will be respectful of the elections and the United States will not continue intervening in Nicaragua and the U.S. will leave us alone," Mr. Ortega said.

"Rather, they should contribute to the economic and social development and the strengthening of democracy in Nicaragua," he added.

Nicaragua is wrought with annual inflation at 1,600 per cent and leaders there are seeking a 300-million-dollar infusion to revitalize the economy.

Regarding assistance for Nicaragua, Mr. Quayle said, "We did it for Panama, we'll do it for Nicaragua."

Mr. Quayle gave no specific time for contra demobilization, saying it would be done "eventually."

First, however, there must be a peaceful transition to democracy and the contras must feel secure before they are demobilized, Mr. Quayle said.

KATHMANDU (MARCH 4) - Nepal freed 184 people Sunday who were arrested since Friday in connection with a general strike called by outlawed political parties, a government spokesman said.

Friday's general strike brought the capital to a virtual standstill, with reports of scattered violence.

The government's chief spokesman, Radhe Shyam Bista, said that 95 people had been released in Kathmandu and 69 in adjoining Lalitpur.

Fourteen arrestees were freed in Kanchanpur and six in Kailali, both about 300 to 360 kilometers (184 to 225 miles) southwest of Kathmandu.

Mr. Bista said "all detainees" were being freed, except those "involved in subversive activities," whom he said would be "released gradually after preliminary examinations."

But he did not provide the total number of people detained since February 18, when the banned political parties, joined by students, leftists and democratic organizations, began the current pro-democracy movement to demand restoration of a multi-party system and full human rights.

Mr. Bista rejected an opposition group's figure of 8,000 arrestees as "too much inflated and baseless."

Activists announced plans for a meeting in Kathmandu on Sunday to denounce the deaths and injuries which have occurred since the protests began.

Riot police have been placed alert and were seen posted at key public establishments here.

PRAGUE (MARCH 4) - Czechoslovak trade unions this weekend disbanded the Revolutionary Trade Union Movement (ROH) linked to the communi last November and set up new organizations in its place.

After two days of chaotic debate, a special trade unions congress agreed here to form a new Czechoslovak Federation of Trade Unions.

The vote came after delegates voted to dissolve the Revolutionary Movement, which the Communist Party founded in June 1945 and which played a key role in the seizing of power by the party in February 1948.

Thirty-four of a total 60 unions represented by almost 2,500 delegates agreed to join the new organization, making it the largest trade union in the country.

A smaller Federation of Culture and the Arts was set up last Sunday by 13 unions representing artists and liberal professions.

Unions that have not yet joined either of the new groups are expected to make a decision within the next few weeks.

However, informed sources say several unions from the Slovak republic plan to remain in their own independent federation, set up Thursday in Bratislava.

With some eight million wage-earning members, the party-controlled organisation was present in workplaces throughout Czechoslovakia.

To many people, it simply meant a box of chocolates every Christmas for members' children, and a present for women members every March 8 on International Women's Day.

In contrast, the new Czechoslovak Federation has declared itself independent of the government and all political parties.

Its program pledges to defend all workers' interests and proposes the formation of independent organizations to run cultural, leisure and rest facilities inherited from the disbanded movement.

Meanwhile for the past two months, officials of the old organization and those involved in setting up the new one have been quarreling over an estimated one billion dollars in assets from the disbanded body.

A resolution adopted by the congress turns over the task of administering and sharing out rest homes, cultural centres and various clubs, to yet another federation which is to represent all unions.

LIMA (MARCH 4) - The Peruvian office of Amnesty International was bombed Sunday, but no one was injured, and another bomb was deactivated, police said.

The two explosive devices were placed in the office doorway early Sunday and one of the bombs blasted a hole in the front of the building, explosive experts said.

No one has claimed responsibility for the attack, police said.

LIMA (MARCH 4) - Peruvian authorities seized at least 250 kilograms (563 pounds) of pure cocaine on a cargo ship rented to a Panamanian company, police said Sunday.

Customs officials said they found the cocaine Saturday packed in plastic bags and hidden in a cargo of zinc during a routine inspection of the North Seal holds as it prepared to leave port for Belgium and Britain.

The ship belonged to a Peruvian company but had been rented to a Panamanian company for some months, authorities said.

In addition, customs officials said they confiscated 41 kilograms (92 pounds) of pure cocaine from a motorboat as it was getting ready to leave port for Colombiano de Leticia, which borders Peru.

PARIS (MARCH 4) - Doorbells will ring across France Monday as the country becomes the first of the European Economic Community's 12 member states to carry out a census in the run-up to the single market of 1993.

France's 110,000 census-takers will spend almost six weeks calling at apartments, houses, hospitals, prisons, convents - and even sidewalks to interview the homeless. Only French nationals living abroad will be left out.

Answering the questionnaires is obligatory, but those filling them out will be guaranteed anonymity by law.

Similar operations using forms that, in EEC terminology, have been "harmonized" as much as possible, are to unfold throughout the Community this year and next.

The aim is to get a picture of more than 323 million Europeans to help work out political, agricultural and social policies, as well as the needs in sectors such as investment and exchanges for the next eight to 10 years.

Data gathered is to be used to draw up 30 joint statistical tables that will be stored at the European Statistics Office.

After France, door-to-door censuses are to be taken in Britain, Ireland, Spain, Portugal, Greece, Italy and Luxembourg. Belgium decided to gather its information from administrative files, while West Germany, which had a census in 1987, will only interview a one per cent sampling of its population.

Denmark and the Netherlands, which have given up taking censuses, will give the EEC information from administrative records, the source they now use as a substitute.

EEC states are to carry out these surveys every seven to 10 years, as recommended by United Nations guidelines.

In France, the census will cost 175 million dollars, according to the national statistics office INSEE, and further studies will be carried out in specific areas, such as working women.

(MARCH 4) UPI - Notre Dame's stunning defeat of No. 2 Missouri on Saturday may not have been the school's greatest upset, but certainly was its most dominating.

Reserve Monty Williams scored 14 points and the Fighting Irish held Missouri to 48 percent shooting, resulting in a 98-67 rout over the Tigers that became the latest in a lenghty chapter of Notre Dame basketball upsets.

The result rivaled such Notre Dame triumphs as the 71-70 victory over UCLA in 1974 that snapped the Bruins' 88-game winning streak and six other upsets of top-rated teams in the past 16 years.

''That is one of the great wins ever here,'' Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps said. ''They could have come in here No. 1. I thought we would win. Winning by 30 - that's a fluke, because of the emotion.''

Notre Dame, 15-11, averted its first four-game losing streak since 1984 and clinched its eighth-straight winning season with the nationally televised upset. It also may be the springboard the Fighting Irish need to get into their sixth straight NCAA Tournament.

''No doubt we belong in the tournament,'' said Williams, whose 14 points off the bench led all scorers. ''People think it's an upset. We knew we could beat them if we played with confidence. I didn't think we would beat them this bad. It's just a matter of keeping our intensity and showing the nation who we are.''

The Fighting Irish also have beaten No. 9 Syracuse and lost to No. 11 Georgia Tech in overtime, giving Phelps confidence Notre Dame will make the 64-team NCAA field.

''We've proven in the past three weeks we can play with the Top 10 teams in the nation,'' Phelps said. ''The important things in our favor are strength of schedule and power rating. You have had teams with 13 losses in there before. We're clawing out. We know what's at stake.''

Missouri, 26-4, lost for the second time in three games, having dropped a 107-90 decision last week to No. 7 Oklahoma. The Tigers, regular-season champions of the Big Eight, had not been beaten by so much since losing 100-66 to Kansas in 1986.

''We just weren't very good,'' Missouri Coach Norm Stewart said. ''Anybody would have a hard time explaining it, so I won't even try. Notre Dame was outstanding. Once they got going, they were tremendous. They're a good team and they've got numbers.''

Keith Robinson added 13 points and 12 rebounds for the Fighting Irish, who held Missouri scoring leader Doug Smith to 13 points, including just one after halftime.

Elsewhere in the Top 20 on Saturday, No. 1 Kansas routed Iowa State 83-63, No. 6 Connecticut dusted Boston College No. 7 Oklahoma beat Oklahoma State 105-94, No. 11 Georgia Tech blasted Clemson 85-69, No. 12 Arkansas fried Rice 104-80, No. 13 Michigan State outlasted No. 20 Minnesota 75-73 in overtime, No. 14 La Salle crushed Fairfield 90-60, co-No. 15 Louisiana State topped Mississippi 103-94, co-No. 15 Oregon State was ripped by Arizona 87-60 and No. 18 Xavier (Ohio) was upended by Dayton 111-108.

SEOUL, South Korea (MARCH 4) UPI - South Korean troops combing a newly-discovered secret tunnel under the border with North Korea triggered a bomb Sunday but all survived the blast, military officials said.

The officials said none of the eight-member sweep team was injured in the incident but a sentry dog, which went ahead of the group to sniff the box containing the bomb, was killed in the explosion.

The tunnel, which South Korea said Communist North Korea built for invasion purposes, was discovered Saturday in the no man's land along the border that divides the Korean peninsula into the two countries, separated since after World War II.

Officials said despite the blast they planned to continue searching through the tunnel below the South-North Military Demarcation Line in the Demilitarized Zone.

The tunnel appeares to have been constructed in the 1980s, unlike three others discovered between 1974 and 1978, the officials said.

The latest tunnel is located north of Yanggu, 65 miles northeast of Seoul. It was spotted by U.S. and South Korean mine dectection experts and its existance was confirmed Saturday afternoon when it was penetrated by a shaft dug by the South.

The six foot wide tunnel was built in a layer of granite 475 feet under ground and extended 1,150 yards into the South from the border line, the officials said. It passed under a border heavily fortified with guns and barbed wire.

Officials said the searchers found pieces of electric wires, some supporting beams, insulators and a North Korean slogan written on the wall of the tunnel, but they did not disclose what the message said.

Defense Minister Lee Sang-hoon, after announcing the tunnel's discovery, told reporters the South suspects there are 26 North Korean tunnels, including the one just found.

He said South Korea would continue its search for more tunnels, saying new scientific devices improved the country's chances of finding the secret passageways.

''This is not only a violation of the Korean Military Armistice Agreement but also an undeniable act of aggression,'' Lee said of the latest discovery. Officials said field artillery pieces and 30,000 men an hour could pass through the tunnel.

Brig. Gen. James Grant from the U.S. military command said at Lee's press conference the tunnel was definitely constructed by North Korea.

''This tunnel was built so water would flow from south to north, which is the logical way,'' he said. ''When you build a tunnel you have to build a tunnel so you can get rid of water as you drill.''

The discovery of the tunnel is certain to dampen relations between the South and the North, already strained over an annual military exercise called Team Spirit which involves U.S. and South Korean forces.

North Korea cut off all channels of dialogue with the South to protest Team Spirit '90, which is to start on March 14 and last for two weeks.

TOKYO (MARCH 4) UPI - Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu returned to Japan Sunday night after a two-day summit with President Bush in Southern California's desert, where he vowed to ''firmly tackle'' causes of the huge U.S.-Japanese trade imbalance in pursuit of a ''global partnership'' with Washington.

Kaifu, who arrived at Tokyo's city airport on a special charter, will get little chance to rest from his trans-Pacific flight.

On Monday morning, Kaifu returns to the Japanese Diet, or Parliament, to face an expected grilling by opposition parties over how he plans to honor pledges made to Bush to reform Japan's economic structure.

Tsuruo Yamaguchi, secretary-general of the major opposition Japan Socialist Party, blasted Kaifu earlier Sunday for ''accepting unilateral U.S. demands'' and ''lacking his own individual diplomacy.''

Yamaguchi said Kaifu showed weakness by failing to tackle thorny trade issues on his own before being forced into a summit by Washington.

At the conclusion of their talks in Rancho Mirage, Calif., Kaifu and Bush promised to attack root causes of economic tension resulting from Japan's almost $50 billion annual trade surplus with the United States.

Although their rhetorical commitments lacked specifics, each professed after two days of talks among the palm-lined fairways of a country club to be satisfied the political will exists for resolving their economic problems.

''Nobody ever goes far enough to do everything exactly the way we want it '' Bush said at a post-summit news conference. ''But I think for those who understand the complexities of this relationship at this juncture, we got everything out of this meeting we had hoped for.''

With the threat of retaliation hanging over U.S. demands for more open Japanese markets, Bush said the talks left Kaifu ''very aware'' of the consequences of failure ''to move forward'' in trade negotiations now under way.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Bush apprised Kaifu of the ''considerable protectionist sentiment'' on Capitol Hill, but did not do so in ''any threatening context.''

In a conciliatory gesture, Bush accepted Japanese arguments that trade expansion is ''a two-way street'' that will require the United States to strengthen its own economy and take other steps to compete in world markets.

TOKYO (MARCH 4) UPI - Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu returned Sunday from his California summit with President Bush, facing calls from Japan's economic community to put the nation's financial house in order or suffer the consequences of continued chaos in stock and currency markets.

Last week, prices on the Tokyo Stock Exchange collapsed to their lowest levels since the October 1987 global stock market crash, with the benchmark index now down 14 percent since the first of the year.

The Japanese yen, which has been flying high since 1985 and is the major reason for Japan's half-decade of booming economic success, has begun cracking at the seams.

The yen has surrendered nearly 5 percent of its value against the U.S. dollar since late January, closing in Tokyo Friday at 149.75 yen after hitting a high of 150.50 yen for the first time in eight months.

Analysts predict the dollar will continue to surge in Tokyo when markets open Monday, possibly reaching the 152-yen level during the week.

Stock prices, which have been falling on the weakness of the yen, were expected to continue tumbling if the greenback surges.

Economists blame the government's weak monetary policies for the yen's slide.

''The weakening of the yen is being generated by a number of perceptions, including the feeling that the government remains weak despite the Feb. 18 lower house election victory of ruling party,'' said Kermit Schoenholtz, an economist for the Solomon Bros. securities house.

''Even more important is the continued perception of the disagreement between the Bank of Japan (the central bank) and the Finance Ministry which causes market players to doubt the credibility of the policy makers.

''We expect upward pressure on the yen will persist for most of 1990 and that means that monetary policy will have to remain tight for much of the year,'' Schoenholtz said.

In recent months, there has been public bickering between the Bank of Japan and various government ministries and agencies over ways to curb inflation and prop up the yen.

The central bank's strategy of massive dollar-selling intervention has so far failed to buoy the Japanese currency. Last week, the bank sold about $8 billion and was expected to sell more in the coming week.

Finance Minister Ryutaru Hashimoto has been pressing for a quick hike in the official discount rate, the interest rate the central bank charges its most creditworthy customers, to drive the dollar down.

But such a move could be a double-edged sword for the United States.

A strengthened yen would help the United States sell more goods to Japan, cutting its $49 billion trade deficit with Tokyo.

Higher Japanese interest rates however would discourage Japanese investment in the United States, which has helped to finance America's huge federal deficit.

At their weekend summit in Palm Springs, Calif., Bush and Kaifu pledged to coordinate policy to stabilize currency rates, but did specify how they would do it.

A finance ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said

''the mere fact of talking about currency issues at the summit talks should appeal to the markets that both sides are totally against the rapid fall of the yen against the dollar.''

Japan's Mainichi Daily News reported Sunday that the Bank of Japan plans to raise the official discount rate by 0.75 percent to 5 percent early this week, after analyzing market trends on Monday.

''If the yen continues to weaken at its present pace, the official discount rate may be raised by as much as 1 percent,'' the newspaper said.

''The stock market has already discounted a hike in the rate of up to 1 percent,'' said trader Kevin Haig of Nomura Securities Co., one of Japan's big four brokerages. ''Anything more would be a surprise.''

TUGUEGARAO, Philippines (MARCH 4) UPI - A rebellious governor seized a hotel before dawn Sunday and allegedly killed a high-ranking military officer, then escaped when government troops routed his gunmen from the building nine hours later in an assault that left at least 19 people dead, officials said.

Renegade Cagayan provincial Gov. Rodolfo Aguinaldo, whose 200-man force seized the downtown Hotel Delfino in an unsuccessful attempt to lead an uprising against President Corazon Aquino, was being pursued, the military said.

Armed forces chief Gen. Renato de Villa issued orders late Sunday to get Aguinaldo ''dead or alive.''

Aquino's local government secretary, Luis Santos, who escaped from the hotel, said he had seen Aguinaldo shoot Brig. Gen. Oscar Florendo, 52, the armed forces' civil relations chief, who was taken hostage by Aguinaldo's forces in the hotel.

Aquino had dispatched Santos and Florendo to Tuguegarao, 220 miles north of Manila, to arrest Aguinaldo, 41, a former constabulary colonel indicted on Tuesday for rebellion in connection with the bloody Dec. 1-9 coup attempt.

De Villa said Florendo was unarmed and was shot and killed at close range.

At least 19 others, mostly rebels, were killed and scores of civilians were wounded in the gunfire in and around the the hotel, regional military spokesman Willie Custodio said. Local officials broadcast appeals for blood donations.

Santos, two town mayors and at least three other senior military officials trapped in the hotel escaped unhurt after the pre-dawn takeover by Aguinaldo and his force of 200 hill tribesmen and rebel returnees.

Acting on orders from Aquino to quell the uprising swiftly, loyalist forces mounted an assault at mid-afternoon, scattering Aguinaldo's men deployed in streets leading to the hotel.

The troops tossed tear gas cannisters to disperse some 2,000 pro-Aguinaldo demonstrators in front of the hotel and battled the rebels inside the four-story building.

By nightfall, 112 of Aguinaldo's men surrendered and 89 others were captured. They were disarmed and spread-eagled in front of the building. Those who surrendered included 12 soldiers who defected Sunday and joined Aguinaldo.

Regional commander Col. Miguel Fontanilla said Aguinaldo abandoned his men and fled to the northern mountains aboard an ambulance.

''Some of our people are pursuing him,'' Fontanilla said.

Sporadic gunfire could still be heard in the dusty provincial capital with a population of 90,000 as loyalist forces conducted mopping up operations.

Opposition Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, a former defense minister who helped oust former dictator Ferdinand Marcos in 1986, was one of those indicted along with Aguinaldo and five other people last week in connection with the December coup attempt. Enrile is detained in Manila.

Aquino, in a statement in Manila, denounced the slaying of Florendo as an ''act of treachery and cowardice.''

''We will see that the fullest force of the law is meted out,'' Aquino said. ''I call on all our people to continue to reject violence and uphold our constitutional democracy.''

Aguinaldo struck before dawn, occupying the hotel, which had 54 registered guests, and deploying his forces around the building. Florendo had told reporters he was on his way to breakfast when he met Aguinaldo, who told him he was a ''prisoner of war.''

Santos and the other officers were alerted and held Aguinaldo's men to a standoff.

''It's an eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation,'' Santos said at one point in a radio interview from the second floor of the hotel. ''We are few, but they are going to have a hard time. The majesty of the law will be upheld. ... It might cost us our lives of course.''

''This is a war of nerves,'' said Aguinaldo, who was wounded in the face in an initial encounter earlier in the day. ''I am demanding justice, freedom and good government,'' he said, echoing a demand by mutineers in the December uprising.

Aguinaldo said he had been assured of help from renegade army Col. Alexander Noble and Moslem separatist forces in the southern island of Mindanao in trying to ignite another rebellion against Aquino.

A congressman, who did not wish to be named, said an uprising in the north and south of the Philippine archipelago could signal a new coup attempt against Aquino. At least 119 people were killed and more than 500 were wounded in the December rebellion, the sixth and most serious in Aquino's four years as president.

De Villa and Defense Secretary Fidel Ramos, said however, at a news conference in Manila after consulting with Aquino that the situation in the country was normal.

They said the 159,000-member armed forces was placed on full alert to meet any contingencies.

Aguinaldo was suspended Jan. 9 while he was undergoing pre-trial investigation for allegedly broadcasting over radio he was sending troops and tanks at the height of the December uprising.

Although denounced for human rights abuses during the Marcos regime, Aguinaldo is popular among the people of Cagayan province for his successful campaign against communist insurgents.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (MARCH 4) UPI - A U.S. congressional delegation that included key architects of American sanctions against South Africa offered Sunday a ''pause'' in their campaign for further sanctions and words of praise for President Frederik de Klerk's initial reforms.

''We are very encouraged that a real process of change has begun which holds enormous possibilities for negotiating a peaceful transition to a genuine non-racial democracy,'' delegation leader William Gray, D-Pa., told a news conference.

''We are deeply impressed that parties on both sides are taking risks and reaching out to one another, demonstrating with their courage a genuine desire to peace,'' Gray said.

''All of this represents a rare window of opportunity through which a new South Africa can emerge.''

The nine-member delegation held talks Thursday with Nelson Mandela and other leaders of the African National Congress in Lusaka, Zambia, before flying to South Africa for meetings with de Klerk, other government leaders and anti-apartheid officials.

The ANC leaders appealed to the congressmen to maintain existing sanctions against Pretoria. The legislators agreed and also expressed concern over how to reward de Klerk for the reform steps taken so far in his nearly 6-month-old administration.

The congressmen affirmed a two-prong strategy of maintaining sanctions against Pretoria under the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, while using diplomacy and public statements to encourage de Klerk to forge ahead with his proposals for power-sharing negotiations with the black majority.

Ron Dellums, the California Democrat who authored a tougher sanctions measure in 1988 that failed to pass the Senate, said that present sanctions would remain in force but it was unlikely additional pressure would be approved pending further developments.

''As a result of this new dynamic I am prepared to pause for a moment to say, 'let's see if it will involve those persons who are appropriate for the process to move forward to the kind of society we would all like to see.'''

''We are not saying that apartheid is being dismantled,'' added Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., ''but we see genuine commitment on both sides to span the racial divide and fashion a new South Africa and that gives us encouragement.''

Approved over a presidential veto, the 1986 legislation imposed stinging sanctions against Pretoria, including a cut in air links between the two countries, sharp curbs on imports and exports and restrictions on lines of credit to South Africa.

''The conditions that gave rise to our desires to impose sanctions are still there - apartheid and repression are still there,'' said Dellums. ''For statutory and political reasons there is no reason to end sanctions now.''

Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., who visited South Africa in January and spoke critically of the government's failure to come to grips with black demands for universal suffrage, moderated his public views Sunday, saying some ''very significant developments'' have occurred in recent weeks.

''I am encouraged,'' he said. ''We came here not simply to address the issue of sanctions. From our perspective the issue is apartheid and its dismantling and the creation of a genuine non-racial democracy. When apartheid ends, our sanctions will end.

''We look forward to the time when we can have a fully normalized relationship between our two countries.''

NEW YORK (MARCH 4) UPI - CBS, concluding Andy Rooney ''is not a man who holds prejudice in his heart,'' prepared Sunday to air the first ''60 Minutes'' essay by the crusty commentator since he was given a reprieve from his three-month suspension.

On a segment scheduled to air about 7:50 p.m. EST, Rooney was expected to discuss the remarks he made concerning blacks and homosexuals that led to his temporary removal from the popular television magazine.

CBS News President David Burke, who yanked Rooney off the air Feb. 8 after an interview he gave to a newspaper with a homosexual readership was published, said Thursday the one-month banishment from the airwaves was long enough.

''It is time Andy returned to his proper place on '60 Minutes,''' Burke said.

During his absence, ''60 Minutes'' slipped in its overall ratings. It had held the ratings for its time period, but last Sunday evening lost to ABC's ''America's Funniest Home Videos.''

Rooney was suspended without pay for allegedly making remarks about blacks during a telephone interview with Chris Bull, a reporter for the Advocate, a biweekly newspaper for homosexuals published in Los Angeles.

Rooney denied making the remarks and Bull said he did not tape the interview.

''Andy Rooney and I have discussed at length the events that led to his suspension as well as the debate that has ensued over the past month,'' Burke said in a statement.

''Andy has consistently stated publicly over this time that he is not a man who holds prejudice in his heart and mind toward any group in our society,'' Burke said. ''Those of us who know him and work with him know two things - first, that is true, and second, it is time Andy returned to his proper place on '60 Minutes.'''

Last week, a gay rights organization expressed anger at reports that Rooney may be reinstated before his three-month suspension ended, and accused the news media of ignoring Rooney's earlier blast at homosexuals.

But Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, said Friday his organization had ''no problems'' with the early return of Rooney, asserting the commentator had ''personally assured us that he did not make the alleged statements relative to race.''

Gay rights activists had targeted Rooney after a statement he made in a Dec. 28 commentary in which he said ''homosexual unions'' cause premature death.

Later, in a letter to the Advocate before his interview with the paper, he explained somewhat graphically why he thought homosexuality ''was in bad taste.''

Thursday, the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation said it ''has achieved its goals of creating a positive dialogue with CBS through which we can work to prevent homophobic remarks such as those made in December by Andy Rooney from slipping through the network's existing standards of broadcast acceptability.

''We hope to find a new sensitivity to these issues evident in his broadcast this Sunday,'' the group said in a statement.

In the interview in the Advocate, Rooney was quoted as saying, ''I've believed all along that most people are born with equal intelligence, but blacks have watered down their genes because the less intelligent ones are the ones that have the most children.''

Rooney vigorously denied having made the statement after its publication.

''I not only deny the quote attributed to me, I say the quotation was made up by a young reporter who couldn't take notes,'' Rooney said after his suspension.

PANAMA CITY, Panama (MARCH 4) UPI - An American soldier injured in a bomb blast at a Panama City nightclub died from abdominal wounds caused by flying glass and shrapnel, the U.S. Southern Command announced Sunday.

Army Spec. Anthony B. Ward. 21, of Houston, Texas, was prounounced dead at 5:15 p.m. Saturday at the Gorgas Army Community Hospital in Panama, said Lt. Cmdr. Peggy Black, Southern Command public affairs officer.

Ward, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Ward, was a member of Headquarters Company, 5th Battalion, 87th Infantry, 193rd Infantry Brigade, Black said.

Sixteen U.S. servicemen and 17 Panamanians were also injured when a bomb thrown from a moving vehicle sent glass and shrapnel ripping through the ''My Place'' disco-bar at 11:30 p.m. Friday.

Two U.S. soldiers have been released from the hospital, and 13 others were listed in satisfactory condition, Black said.

Black said that since the bombing, the U.S. military has put bars, discotheques and casinos off limits. Military personnel will, however, be allowed to go to restaurants.

In Rancho Mirage, Calif., where President Bush was spending the weekend, the White House expressed its regrets over the death of the U.S. serviceman.

''We are saddened by the death of Army Spec. Anthony B. Ward and convey our heartfelt condolences to his family,'' White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in a statement. ''This is an unfortunate incident that mars the heroic steps the people of Panama are taking in building democracy.''

The Panamanian Interior Ministry said the explosion injured 17 Panamanians all of whom were released after being treated at hospitals.

Police said the explosive was thrown through a disco window, and that no one had claimed responsibility for the attack.

Black said Sunday there were still no clues as to who was responsible.

''We don't know who threw the bomb, so we don't know if it was political or criminal, or who was behind it,'' she said.

The two U.S. servicemen released were Petty Officer John Petraroi, 28, of Rahway, N.J., and Pvt. Dereck W. Piquard, 20, of Woodhaven, Mich.

Army personnel still hospitalized: Sgt. Robert A. Burford, 24, of Oakridge Pa., Spec. Ronald D. Sallis, 22, of Chippewa Falls, Wis., Spec. Brian P. Fiske, 22, of Columbus, Ohio; Pvt. Jesus A. Omar, 25, of Guam; Pvt. David C. McKinney, 28, of Amarillo, Texas, and Pvt. Mark A. Hatfield, 24, of Clairton, Pa., all in the Army.

U.S. Air Force personnel still in the hosptial are: Sgt. Mark G. Sacco, 27 of Ellwood City, Pa., Airman 1st Class Joseph D. Pelletier, Jr., 20, of Bucksport, Maine, and Airman Warren A. Waters, 22, of Phoenix, Ariz.

U.S. Navy personnel hospitalized were Petty Officer Jeffrey Warren, 27, of Mount Olive, Miss.; Petty Officer 2nd Class Charles L. Curtis, 26, of Shelby, N.C.; Petty Officer 3rd Class Calbert Malone Jr., of Greenville, Miss., and Construction Recruit Alex U. Bustamante, 19, of Ajo, Ariz.

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (MARCH 4) UPI - Former Ambassador Walter Annenberg bestowed $50 million on the United Negro College Fund Sunday, saying: ''If one segment of the people is behind ... you obviously have a very unwholesome citizenry in the country.''

With President Bush at his side, Annenberg also said it was his obligation and the obligation of others who are wealthy, to support those less fortunate and that he was pleased to take part ''in this very significant role of support for underprivileged human beings.''

''It's psychologically important that blacks indicate to the rest of the population in the country that they have the capacity to teach and serve '' Annenberg told reporters after a brief ceremony marking the donation.

''If one segment of the people is behind other segments of the population, you obviously have a very unwholesome citizenry in the country,'' he said.

The brief ceremony was held on the golf course of the 82-year-old former ambassador's opulent 205-acre Sunnylands estate. Annenberg wore a Kelly green blazer bearing the estate insignia and lime green slacks.

The head of the college fund, Chris Edley, accepted the donation and grew angry when a reporter asked Annenberg to explain his remarks.

Bush and his wife, Barbara, took part in the ceremony, which offered reporters a rare glimpse of the oasis estate nestled in the desert that has served as a retreat for a string of Republican presidents.

Bush, before departing to play golf, noted his own support of the fund since his days at Yale University.

''I'm delighted to know that my good friend, Walter Annenberg, has set such a significant and marvelous example with his gift to this excellent cause,'' the president said.

Speaking with reporters Saturday before he was to officiate over the donation ceremony, Bush seemed surprised that word of the contribution, the largest gift to black colleges on record, had leaked out.

But, he said, ''I think that generosity ... will bring on well-deserved support from others. It's most generous and one of the most brilliant 'thousand points of light' I can think of.'' ambassador to Britain, was to announce the gift, among the largest contributions ever made to American higher education, at his estate near Palm Springs, Calif.

Bush, who is honorary chairman of UNCF's current three-year $540 million capital fund-raising effort, and his wife, were Annenberg's guests this weekend while he conferred with Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu.

Bush, ending a five-day, cross-country journey, planned to return to Washington shortly after the presentation ceremony.

The fund, founded in 1944, is a consortium of 41 private black colleges that raised $45.8 million for its member institutions last year.

The largest gift to a single educational institution is believed have been made by Robert Woodruff, former chairman of the Coca-Cola Co., who gave $105 million to Atlanta's Emory University in the late 1970s.

Annenberg, who developed his father's company, Triangle Publications, into a massive publishing empire, founded Seventeen and TV Guide magazines before selling the firm for $3 billion in 1988.

A close friend of recent Republican presidents, Annenberg served as ambassador to Great Britain from 1969 to 1974.

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (MARCH 4) UPI - The crew of the shuttle Atlantis glided to a picture-perfect Mojave Desert touchdown Sunday, leaving what is believed to be an advanced reconnaissance satellite behind in orbit to spy on the Soviet Union.

Dropping out of a partly cloudy sky after a long glide the length of California, commander John ''J.O.'' Creighton and co-pilot John Casper deftly guided Atlantis to a graceful touchdown on dry lakebed runway 23 at 10:09 a.m. PST in the final chapter of a successful 4 1/2-day space odyssey.

Kicking up twin rooster tails of dust as it barreled down the desert runway at more than 200 mph, Creighton slowly brought Atlantis's nose down and pumped the shuttle's brakes to bring the speeding spaceplane to a stop after some 71 orbits and nearly 2 million miles.

''Congratulations on a great flight, guys, and welcome back,'' radioed astronaut Stephen Oswald from mission control in Houston, according to NASA spokeswoman Billie Deason. Because of a military news blackout on the flight, the crew's response was not known.

Navy Capt. Creighton, Air Force Col. Casper - both 46 - Marine Lt. Col. David Hilmers, 40; Air Force Col. Richard ''Mike'' Mullane, 44; and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Pierre Thuot, 34, climbed out of the black-and-white spaceplane about 50 minutes after touchdown, smiling and looking none the worse for their stay in weightlessness.

The astronauts made a quick inspection of the orbiter and posed for a group photograph, waving and flashing thumbs-up signs at the camera, before being chauffered away to brief medical examinations and reunions with family members. All five planned to fly back to their homes in Houston later in the day.

Closeup television views showed that Atlantis appeared to have sailed through its launch last Wednesday and landing Sunday in excellent condition, but a complete inspection will be conducted over the next several days.

The Air Force-imposed news blackout that governs all military shuttle flights remained in effect to the end, with communications between the astronauts and mission control in Houston kept secret.

The only problem during the otherwise flawless re-entry was a slight pressure drop in one of three hydraulic systems that provide power to move the ship's wing flaps and tail fin, but NASA officials said it was not a serious problem.

Left behind in space was a 19-ton military satellite reportedly capable of taking super-sharp digital images of ground targets around the world between 62 degrees north and south latitude, which includes more than 80 percent of the Soviet Union.

As usual with such military missions, details about the shuttle's payload were classified and NASA refused to provide any information about what Atlantis's crew did during their space voyage.

But following past practice, the astronauts undoubtedly carried out medical research, operated other ''secondary'' experiments and conducted extensive Earth photography throughout the mission.

Atlantis's landing clears the way for the April 12 launch of the space shuttle Discovery on a long-awaited mission to put the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope in orbit.

Considered by many to be the showcase payload of the shuttle era, the 43-foot-long telescope, equipped with the most precise mirror ever built, is expected to revolutionize optical astronomy once in operation above Earth's obscuring atmosphere, seeing seven times deeper into the cosmos than ever before.

At the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, engineers were scheduled to tow Discovery from its hangar to a nearby assembly building Monday to attach the shuttle to its solid-fuel boosters and external tank.

If all goes well, Discovery will be hauled to launch pad 39B March 16 and the telescope will be placed in its cargo bay March 28 to set the stage for launch.

While the space telescope mission will be conducted in the glare of publicity, Atlantis's flight was carried out under a veil of secrecy. It was the fourth military mission in the post-Challenger era and the sixth in the 34-flight history of the program.

Despite the strict ''no comment'' policy by NASA and the Air Force, Aviation Week & Space Technology magazine reported in January that Atlantis was carrying a 37,000-pound $500 million photo-reconnaissance satellite capable of radioing back digital images of ground targets as they are taken.

The magazine also reported the satellite was equipped with electronics gear to eavesdrop on supposedly secure Soviet military communications. It is believed the satellite was launched early Thursday. Sources who requested anonymity said the spacecraft was operating properly.

MOSCOW (MARCH 4) UPI - Soviet voters in the nation's three major republics jammed the polls Sunday in elections that Mikhail Gorbachev called a ''people's referendum on perestroika.''

The elections represent the second stage of the Soviet leader's democratic reforms that began last year with the emergence of a largely freely elected national parliament.

Sunday's multi-candidate elections offered voters choices among Russian nationalists, orthodox communists and radical reformers. In some places, as many as 20 candidates vied for one spot.

At stake were 1,068 seats in the Russian Republic's parliament, 450 places for the Ukrainian legislature and 310 in Byelorussia's, and hundreds more in city and regional councils.

Gorbachev, accompanied by his wife Raisa and his granddaughter, cast his vote in Moscow's Oktyabrskaya district and praised the broad array of candidates on the ballot.

''The essence is that it is a people's referendum on perestroika,'' Gorbachev told reporters. ''I do hope people will come forward and take greater responsibility for themselves.''

Showing combative spirit, Gorbachev declared he would not refuse a nomination for his just created super presidency when the Congress of People's Deputies votes for a chief executive next week.

''I don't like nominating myself, by myself, though as chairman of the Supreme Soviet (standing parliament), I have that legislative right,'' he said.

''But if I am among the nominees, I won't retreat, that's for sure. In my opinion, no one would understand it if I did.''

First official results in the regional elections were expected Monday in what the offical Tass news agency said was high voter turnout.

Because the Soviet Union stretches across 11 time zones, voters in the Far East cast the first ballots 10 hours before Moscow's voters trudged to the polls.

By noon in the Soviet Far East, 61 percent of the electorate made their choices in Sakhalin, 54.8 in the Amur region bordering China and 48 percent in Khabarovsk, a major city north of Vladivostok.

Although the communists were the only recognized party in the balloting, they were opposed by a host of contestants from movements certain to become opposition parties once the Communist Party formalizes its pledge to end its monopoly on power.

''The elections are being held for the first time under the provisions of a new legislation which envisages an alternative choice and a real contest of candidates,'' Tass said.

A total of 6,700 candidates vied for the 1,068 spots in the Russian Parliament, 3,091 ran for the Ukraine legislature, and 1,473 for the 310 spots in Byelorussia.

The three republics comprise almost three-fourths of the country's population of 290 million people. The Russian republic has a population of 147 million, the Ukraine 51.7 million, and Byelorussia 10.2 million.

On the eve of the elections in the giant Russian republic, Pravda newspaper rocked the country's fast-changing political landscape by publishing the program of the Communist Party's radical wing. It was another sign of splintering at the top of Soviet power structure.

The best known candidate was Boris Yeltsin, the firebrand maverick of the Soviet Parliament, seeking a seat to the Russian Republic's Parliament from the city of Sverdlovsk.

Last month Yeltsin said he would seek the presidency of the republic as the next step in his remarkable rebound from political disgrace in November 1987, when he was booted from the leadership of the Moscow party committee and later from the ruling Politburo.

Gocha Arevadze, a Georgian resident of Moscow's Gagarin district, said he voted for supporters of Yeltsin ''not because Yeltsin is going to give us any benefit but because he is against what we have now.''

A sampling of two polling places in Moscow revealed confusion among the voters. In the Oktyabrskaya region, the turnout was 65 percent about 7 p.m. In the Sevastopol region turnout reached 50 percent by 3 p.m.

One voter said: ''Soviet voters are just like American ones. They don't know who they're voting for and don't really care.''

''Voters are tired,'' another voter said. ''We have to read 50 different biographies in order to make a choice.''

The ballots did not indicate Communist Party membership, indicating just factory director, professor or professional.

Because there is an average of six candidates running for each seat, and a candidate must get 50 percent of the vote to be elected, observers forecast many run-off elections.

Russian candidates held last-minute rallies Saturday in campaigns proclaiming ''the rebirth of Russia'' and warning that the tide of nationalism throughout the Soviet Union threatens its dominant ethnic group.

Yelena Bonner, widow of the late Andrei Sakharov, asked voters to keep her husband's democratic ideals alive in the elections Sunday by supporting three progressives in their bids to join the Russian parliament.

The elections come eight days after historic polls in Lithuania, where voters swept the Communist Party from power and chose a pro-independence parliament expected to ratify quick secession from the Soviet Union.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (MARCH 4) UPI - A precarious calm prevailed over east

Beirut Sunday as mediators continued their efforts to consolidate a fragile truce that would end a bloody 5-week-old dispute between rival Christian military leaders.

Police reported scattered skirmishes and sniper fire during the night along newly established fronts in the Christian enclave between troops loyal to Gen. Michel Aoun and Samir Geagea's Lebanese Forces militiamen.

A woman was wounded by sniper fire early Sunday while attempting to flee east Beirut to the western part of the capital, police said.

The fragile truce, which began Saturday, followed two days of heavy fighting between the Christian foes, raising to 790 the number of people killed and 2,730 wounded since the battle for the control of the 310-square-mile Christian enclave of Beirut began Jan. 31.

Residents of east Beirut, many of whom spent the night in underground shelters, took advantage of a quiet sunny Sunday and went out searching for bread, water and other necessities.

Hundreds gathered around newly built public water tanks to fill containers witnesses said. Bread and gasoline were only available in limited amounts in black markets.

Water and power supplies were cut in both parts of Beirut after fighting erupted in east Beirut.

Other residents, fearing violence might resume at any moment, took advantage of the lull to flee to safety.

A Christian mediation team said Saturday it was optimistic about reaching a final political agreement between Aoun and Geagea.

The team said the rivals accepted proposals to stop their propaganda war as a first step. Observers said it was unlikely that an agreement would be reached, even though Aoun has been unable to smash the Lebanese Forces in east Beirut.

Aoun, who launched his latest offensive at dawn last Thursday, expected his forces to capture two remaining militia strongholds in east Beirut in almost one major attack.

Instead, the two forces have battled on nearly equal terms.

Meanwhile, Syrian-backed President Elias Hrawi and Prime Minister Selim Hoss left Beirut Sunday on a short trip to Saudi Arabia and Algeria.

The Lebanese officials planned to discuss with Saudi King Fahd and Algerian President Chadli Benjadid ways to resolve their country's crisis and ask for political, military and economic assistance.

Saudi Arabia, Algeria and Morocco form the Arab tripartite committee entrusted by the Arab League to solve the Lebanese crisis and achieve peace in the war-torn country.

Hrawi and Hoss were not to visit Morocco, because of King Hassan's previous commitments.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (MARCH 4) UPI - With the shuttle Atlantis safely back on Earth, NASA is gearing up for an April 12 launch of the Hubble Space Telescope, possibly the most significant step forward in astronomy since Galileo first trained his spyglass on the heavens.

Once released from the shuttle Discovery and in operation above Earth's obscuring atmosphere, the telescope and its 94.5-inch mirror, the smoothest ever made, will allow astronomers to peer seven times deeper into the cosmos and observe with a sharper view than ever before, perhaps enabling them to answer fundamental questions about the birth and eventual death of the universe.

Astronaut Kathryn Sullivan, one of Discovery's five crew members, said the telescope will open so many new vistas that astronomers will have to struggle just to figure out the right questions to ask, much less come up with the right answers.

''This would be like standing on the top of Mount Everest in a dense fog, just you and me, and we look around and all we can see is each other, three rocks and a little bit of snow and we live for weeks thinking that's all there is in the universe,'' she said.

''And then the fog lifts! And you suddenly see all sorts of people and creatures and environments ... that exist in the universe that you were totally unaware of. That, in a sense, is what the telescope represents. It will so expand the horizons of our view that we don't even know the right questions to ask.''

Originally scheduled for launch in August 1986, the $1.5 billion telescope was grounded by the Challenger disaster. Now, after a frustrating four-year delay, the giant telescope is finally ready to begin its pathfinding work on the high frontier.

Discovery was scheduled to be towed from its hangar to the nearby Vehicle Assembly Building Monday for attachment to a pair of solid-fuel boosters and an external fuel tank. If all goes well, the assembled space vehicle will be hauled to launch pad 39B on March 16.

The 43-foot Hubble Space Telescope - HST - is scheduled to be taken to the launch pad's ultra-clean ''white room'' March 26 for installation in Discovery's cargo bay March 28.

Liftoff of the 35th shuttle mission is set for 9:21 a.m. EDT on April 12.

At the controls will be commander Loren Shriver and co-pilot Charles Bolden. Their crewmates are Sullivan, Steven Hawley and Bruce McCandless.

The flight plan calls for Hawley, using Discovery's 50-foot robot arm, to deploy the telescope roughly 25 hours after liftoff. Sullivan and McCandless will be standing by, ready to don spacesuits for an emergency spacewalk if the telescope's solar panels do not unfold as planned.

For the next two days, the telescope will be checked out by ground controllers at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md., while Discovery stays close by. Assuming no problems, the shuttle will glide to a landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., five days after liftoff.

It is difficult to overstate the significance of the Hubble Space Telescope to the field of optical astronomy, which began nearly 400 years ago when the Italian Galileo Galilei first began using a primitive refracting telescope in 1609.

HST and its five instruments will be able to see objects seven times farther away and with 10 times more clarity than ever before, allowing astronomers to study stars and galaxies up to 14 billion light years away, that is, the distance light travels in 14 billion years at a speed of 186,000 miles per second.

At that distance, astronomers expect to view galaxies that were formed shortly after the big bang explosion that is thought to have created the cosmos some 15 billion years ago.

''We can do 10 to 30 times better than any telescope on the ground in terms of the clarity of the photographs,'' said Edward Weiler, NASA's chief astronomer. ''In terms of sensitivity, we can observe objects 50 to 100 times fainter than any telescope on the ground that exists today.

''That means we can look back into the universe seven to 10 times farther and,because we are above the atmosphere, we can observe in other wavelengths, other colors, than what is available on the ground.''

As for the precision of the instrument's mirror, he said HST would have a resolution of seven thousandths of an arc second. Or, as he put it:

''If you could hit a golf ball with an accuracy of seven thousandths of an arc second, that small of an angle, you could hit a hole-in-one on a par three whose tee was in Washington and whose hole was in Denver.''

The Hubble Space Telescope is the first in a series of four ''great observatory'' spacecraft scheduled for launch over the next few years that will move astronomy a quantum leap ahead.

Following HST's launch, NASA plans to put the Gamma Ray Observatory in orbit in November, followed by an X-ray telescope and one to study the universe at infrared wavelengths.

(MARCH 4) UPI - President Bush says his two-day summit with Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu went exactly as he desired. In his words... ''we got everything out of this meeting we had hoped for.'' Both sides said they did NOT anticipate major breakthroughs at the California get-together. But they left the meeting saying they had renewed hopes that efforts would be taken to reduce the 50-BILLION-dollar U-S trade deficit with Japan.

The five-member crew aboard the shuttle Atlantis is readying itself for today's landing at California's Edwards Air Force Base. But weather forecasts indicate windy conditions may force the delay of the spaceplane's return to Earth. Air Force meteorologists predict wind gusts between 14 to 21 miles an hour. NASA's flight rules ban landings when crosswinds exceed 17 miles an hour.

Military analysts in Thailand say Cambodian resistance forces have regrouped following a sudden government offensive that toppled 12 guerrilla outposts in the past week and a half. HARARE, Zimbabwe (MARCH 4) UPI - Black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela flew to Zimbabwe Sunday on the second leg of a foreign tour but aides concerned over his ability to maintain the punishing pace scaled back his schedule.

Mandela received a red-carpet welcome led by President Robert Mugabe, who hugged the recently-freed prisoner as he stepped off a chartered Zambian Airways flight from Lusaka. Mugabe led him through a reception line that took nearly an hour to traverse.

With a slow wave of his arm, Mandela, 71, silenced a cheering crowd of more than 3,000 well-wishers who turned out to greet him. He then delivered a 15-minute address in which he appealed for black unity and called on white South Africans to abandon their support for ''racism and oppression.''

''We are trying to bring about peace in the country,'' Mandela said. ''We are trying to persuade the government that it is madness that we should be killing one another when we can sit down, talk and settle our problems.''

Mandela was whisked into town at the start of his three-day visit and received a freedom award from the capital city but aides then delayed his appearance with Mugabe at a national sports stadium rally by more than three hours to give him time to rest.

The black nationalist has yet to enjoy a day off since his Feb. 11 release from 27 years imprisonment and kept up a grueling schedule during his five days in Lusaka that included dozens of meetings, speeches and intense talks with ANC officials.

Mugabe apologized ''profoundly'' to a crowd of fewer than 20,000 people in the 65,000-seat stadium for the delay, but admitted the planned schedule was too tiring for Mandela.

From Harare, Mandela is scheduled to fly to Tanzania to visit ANC military training bases. Although no official changes have been announced, it appears that Mandela will then return to South Africa, cutting short his 17-day journey and delaying a visit with ailing ANC President Oliver Tambo in a Stockholm clinic.

In his address at the sports stadium, Mandela praised Mugabe's handling of his country's independence in 1980 and a policy of reconciliation after a bitter 7-year war against the white minority rulers.

Mandela urged South Africa's 5 million whites to examine Zimbabwe's course in burying the racial conflict.

''The only thing white South Africans have to fear is any attempt to perpetuate apartheid or to devise new ways of defending minority white rule,'' said Mandela, who was named ANC deputy president on Friday after a meeting of the ANC's leadership in exile in Lusaka.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (MARCH 4) UPI - An Iranian delegation paid unofficial visits to the capitals of Syria and Lebanon Sunday amid a swirl of fresh reports on the possible release of Western hostages in Lebanon.

The Independent newspaper of London reported the Iranian negotiators' mission was to organize the release of one or more of the 17 captives.

According to the newspaper, leading Iranian figures and U.S. officials, including Cyrus Vance, have already held secret talks in Geneva, Muscat and Ankara.

''The Americans involved were careful not to have contacts with present officials in Washington,'' the Independent said.

British officials acknowledged, according to the Independent, that ''an approach'' had been made several weeks ago offering to open negotiations for the release of Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite.

A sum of $20 million was to be included in the deal, it said.

The Iranian team was dispatched to Beirut by Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani, who has shown interest in developing relations with the West to prop up Iran's tottering economy, the newspaper said.

Iranian sources in Beirut said Mahmoud Rafsanjani, the brother of Rafsanjani, met with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa in Damascus and Lebanese Health Minister Abdullah Rasi in Beirut.

The sources said Mahmoud Rafsanjani talked with Rasi on the possibility of Iranian assistance in reconstructing a water circulation network demolished in the ongoing inter-Christian fighting, but hinted that the plight of 17 Western hostages may have been discussed in the Syrian capital.

Militia sources in Beirut told United Press International last week that the brother of Iran's strongman was involved in behind-the-scene U.S.-Iranian contacts to negotiate the release of American captives.

U.S. officials have emphatically denied reported clandestine efforts and President Bush branded them as ridiculous. Washington has officially vowed not to strike deals with ''terrorist organizations or states.''

But Moslem sources told UPI that one of the eight American captives was likley to regain freedom as a result of the secret U.S.-Iranian diplomacy.

The reports of the possibility of freeing some of the captives came after a visit to Syria by Peggy Say, the sister of U.S. captive Terry Anderson. Say left Syria in high spirits, and said in London that she believed it ''was the beginning of the end'' of the hostages' ordeal.

Political sources said the Syrians told Say during her visit they were encouraged about freeing captives because of positive gestures from Iran.

Syria, which has some 35,000 troops in Lebanon, has played a role in the technical side of freeing some foreign captives in the past.

Also last week, Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, believed to be the guide of the Iranian-funded Hezbollah organization - the group believed holding the foreigners - called during a sermon at a mosque for ''closing the file'' of the captives.

Fadlallah, who had stayed tight-lipped about the hostages and rebuffed questions about them for months, raised the issue following a visit to Iran.

Iran's president, Rafsanjani, has been described by many analysts as a pragmatic leader favoring a realistic policy with the West, unlike powerful mullahs who favor an open-ended struggle against the Western world.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (MARCH 4) UPI - Army troops in the troubled independent black homeland of Ciskei seized power in a bloodless coup before dawn Sunday, toppling President-for-life Lennox Sebe in a backlash over corruption and human rights abuses, the coup leader announced.

South Africa pledged not to crush the rebellion as thousands of blacks spilled into the streets of the capital of Bisho to celebrate the ouster of the 64-year-old Sebe, who has ruled with an iron hand since the territory accepted Pretoria's offer of independence in 1981.

Motorists honked horns and armed soldiers guarding government buildings raised clenched fists in solidarity. Crowds chanting ''Forward to freedom'' and ''Down with Sebe'' swarmed the national stadium to hear the coup leader's announcement, witnesses said.

Troops maintained a generally low profile, but fired shots in the air when mobs looted and burned shops near the main bus terminal, causing extensive damage, the witnesses said. No injuries were reported.

Led by Brig. O. Josh Gqozo, a young officer who was recalled from duty as military attache in Pretoria late last year, the coup took place in the early hours Sunday, less than 48 hours after Sebe left the country, allegedly on a trade mission to Taiwan.

There was widespread speculation in Bisho, however, that Sebe fled after learning of his imminent overthrow. His heavily fortified private palace, which included an electric fence, appeared to have been abandoned. Ciskei officials said Sebe was in Hong Kong.

The defense force chief, his deputy and Sebe's son, Kwane, who headed an elite police unit, were detained and Cabinet ministers placed under house arrest.

The military ruler of the nearby black homeland of Transkei said the coup dealt another blow to South Africa's homelands policy, which has stripped millions of blacks of South African citizenship since 1976 in a bid to relegate blacks to the role of migrant workers in South African cities and rural gold and coal mines.

Ciskei was the last of four homelands to accept independence as part of Pretoria's 40-year-old ''grand apartheid'' policies. Six other homelands refused to accept indpependence.

The government of South Africa, the only nation to recognize Ciskei's independence, pledged not to interfere in the conflict in the New Jersey-size territory of about 900,000 people on the Indian Ocean coast.

But official Pretoria policy toward the new ruler was unclear amid the rapidly changing political climate in South Africa sparked by President Frederik de Klerk's reform initiatives last month and calls for power-sharing negotiations with the black majority.

Sebe's government, like those in several other homelands, has been accused of widespread corruption and human rights violations over the years, including assassinations and torture of political activists opposed to the homelands policy.

Police last month launched a crackdown on anti-Sebe protests, and as many as eight people died in police gunfire on Feb. 11 during celebrations of the release of black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela.

Gqozo said at a news conference the territory's constitution had been temporarily suspended but he gave ''the unqualified assurance that the transition will be peaceful and orderly'' and said the judiciary remained unaffected by the uprising.

He said a four-member military council headed by himself and including one white brigadier would initially govern the territory, followed by a military-civilian administration that will rule ''until a society based on democratic principles can be established.''

An estimated 200 political detainees will be released immediately and ''we will shortly be consulting with all representative groups to discuss matters with a view to the normalization of the present unacceptable situation,'' he said.

He said the coup was carried out ''with great reluctance'' following ''widespread violence throughout Ciskei, ordered and sanctioned by the previous government.'' Mass detentions had undermined the judiciary and Sebe's government engaged in widespread corruption and abuse of state money, Gqozo said.

''Over a period of five months, there have been pleas from the Ciskeian citizens that the military should take over, as they were no longer satsified with the Ciskeian government authorities under President Lennox Sebe,'' Gqozo said in a radio address.

Maj. Gen. Bantu Holomisa, a 34-year-old black officer who seized power in a December 1987 coup in the nearby homeland of Transkei, said Ciskei officers had ''seen the road signs... that apartheid and her structures for the last decade have proved to be a failure.''

Holomisa has called for a referendum in his homeland on whether to seek ''reunification'' with South Africa and moved to improve ties with the African National Congress in the months leading up to Mandela's release.

''Judging from what has been happening over the last few weeks, people being killed and harrassed, I think they had to get in and salvage the situation,'' Holomisa said by telephone. ''I think the people of Ciskei, the youth in particular, have spoken.''

MIAMI (MARCH 4) UPI - Boisterous Eastern Airlines machinists marched peacefully through airport terminals in Miami, Pittsburgh and Boston Sunday, vowing their year-old strike will last ''one day longer than Frank Lorenzo.''

Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent company, Texas Air Corp., was vilified in placards and chants.

In Miami, Eastern's headquarters, 2,000 to 3,000 members of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers and their families and other supporters gathered outside a union hall, chanting ''Down with Lorenzo'' and ''One day longer.''

They likened Lorenzo to Cuba's Fidel Castro - a pointed insult in Miami, a city where many Cuban emigres live - and called the two ''the last remaining tyrants, now that Eastern Europe is free.''

They then boarded buses for the trip to the airport, where they had obtained a permit to demonstrate en masse.

''Our main message was, we are going to win even though the courts won't do anything about it,'' said Charlie Kirsch, a trustee for the Miami local.

The strike anniversary cames three days after David Shapiro, an examiner appointed by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York, concluded that Texas Air had drained assets from Eastern before Lorenzo filed for bankruptcy protection to reorganize the airline.

Union officials said they were pleased with the conclusions of the report, but felt that Shapiro should have brought formal charges against those involved and appointed an independent tustee to run Eastern.

''Lorenzo stole close to half a billion dollars, but that's OK,'' Kirsch growled.

Two hundred stikers marched through Logan International Airport in Boston, declaring they would not return to work until Lorenzo is gone.

At Greater Pittsburgh International Airport, an estimated 650 people marched through the main terminal without incident, police said. Inspector Floyd Nevling said the marchers shouted and chanted, but there were no arrests.

''They were peaceful. There were no problems,'' Nevling said.

The machinists, joined by miners, steelworkers and relatives, hoped to show the unity of union workers is ''stronger today than it was a year ago when the strike began,'' said Alex Berezansky of the Pittsburgh Airman Lodge 1044 of the IAM.

''We want to let people know we're still on strike and we're not going to go away,'' said Ron Read, a 16-year employee on strike in Pittsburgh. ''We're going to make sure Frank Lorenzo doesn't win either. ... They've been raping our company.''

Shapiro's report, filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York, recommended Texas Air pay Eastern more than $280 million to atone for some of the transactions that may have cost Eastern valuable assets.

Texas Air initially agreed to the settlement, but officials have since threatened to challenge it, claiming it contained misleading errors.

The machinists struck Eastern over a contract dispute March 4, prompting a sympathy strike by the company's pilots and flight attendants, and sending the airline into Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection five days later.

The pilots and flight attendants have since returned to work. IAM officials said only 5 percent of their members had returned to work at Eastern, though many have gone to work at other airlines or found other jobs.

The striking machinists held other rallies in Atlanta, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles during the weekend, union officials said.

(MARCH 4) UPI - Philippine President Aquino says today's slaying of a senior military hostage by rebels loyal to a renegade governor was an ''act of treachery and cowardice.'' Anti-government guerrillas killed the general when government troops attacked the hotel the rebels had seized nine hours earlier. The military says 100 rebels surrendered. But their leader escaped during the gunfight.

One witness who saw a substitute Greyhound bus driver hit and kill a picketing striker in Redding, California, says the driver appeared ''really scared.'' Dozens of strikers tried to stop the vehicle from leaving the scene of the accident. The driver drove off and flagged down a patrol car 15 miles away to report the accident. Greyhound's president expressed sadness about the death, but said it was ''NOT an act of malicious activity.''

Hawaii has been hit by what one union leader says is the largest hotel strike in island history. 75-hundred employees at 11 major hotels walked off their jobs yesterday after negotiators failed to reach a wage agreement during last-ditch talks. The union has pressed for a 15 percent surcharge on food and beverages and a five percent room surcharge, to be divided among hotel workers.

An official in the nominally independent black homeland of Ciskei says the military has staged a bloodless coup. The official says the government was overthrown last night while the homeland's president-for-life visited Taiwan. The South African government, which granted Ciskei independence nine years ago, could NOT confirm if the coup succeeded. Johannesburg is alone in recognizing Ciskei's nationhood.

(MARCH 4) UPI - South Korean military officials say an eight-member search team combing a newly discovered secret tunnel beneath the border with North Korea triggered a bomb. Seoul says it is an act of aggression by North Korea.

President Bush says he thinks he impressed upon Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu the need for Japan to ''move forward'' in current trade negotiations with Washington. Kaifu left the California meeting, vowing to work on reducing the nearly 50-BILLION-dollar U-S-Japanese trade imbalance. But he also stressed to Bush that U-S goods must be of the ''highest quality'' to compete on the world market.

A report says the congressional panel investigating the conduct of Massachussetts Democrat Barney Frank has almost wrapped up its inquiry. UNnamed Capitol Hill sources say the House Ethics Committee will likely only mildly scold Frank. The sources say that's because the panel has detected holes in the testimony offered by his chief detractor, Stephen Gobie.

It appears as if the Republican National Committee would like author Tom Clancy to cash in on his popularity. A report says G-O-P leaders have asked Clancy, a registered Republican, to throw his hat in the ring for Maryland's 1st congressional seat. Clancy, who wrote ''The Hunt for Red October,'' says he has NOT had time to consider the offer.

Japanese Prime Minister Kaifu is being urged by Japan's economic community to put the nation's financial house in order. Radio reports from the nominally independent black homeland of Ciskei say security forces have assumed power following a bloodless coup. In Rancho Mirage, California, where President Bush is spending the weekend the White House expressed its regrets over the death of the soldier. More trouble for Philippine President Aquino.

Officials say a rebellious provincial governor and a 200-man force seized a hotel in Cagayan province today in an unsuccessful attempt to lead an uprising against Aquino.

Governor Rodolfo Aguinaldo escaped from the hotel 220 miles north of Manila when government troops attacked in an assault that left at least 19 people dead. Scores of civilians were wounded. Most of Aguinaldo's men later surrendered or were captured.

(MARCH 4) UPI - There are more indications that Western hostages in Lebanon might be released soon.

Iranian sources say a delegation that included the brother of Iran's president paid unofficial visits to Beirut and Damascus today.

In London, a report says the Iranian group's mission is to organize the release of one or more of the 17 Western hostages.

The report says leading Iranian and U-S figures, including Cyrus Vance, have already held secret talks in Geneva and two other cities. The report said- quoting now- ''The Americans involved were careful NOT to have contacts with present officials in Washington.''

Last week, militia sources in Beirut told U-P-I that behind-the-scenes talks between Iranian and U-S officials had taken place. The sources said those talks might lead to the release of at least one American hostage this month.

U-S officials emphatically denied that secret talks had taken place.

John Poindexter goes to trial tomorrow on charges stemming from the

The former national security adviser faces five criminal charges, including accusations that he obstructed congressional inquiries and made false statements to Congress.

The trial is expected to feature videotaped testimony from former President Reagan, who earlier staged a long legal battle in an effort to avoid testifying.

It's still questionable whether the trial will feature excerpts from Reagan's presidential diaries. Poindexter's lawyers have pushed to get excerpts of the diaries released, but Reagan and President Bush say the diaries are protected by ''executive privilege.''

U-S District Judge Harold Greene is reviewing the diary claims.

The Iran-Contra scandal involved the secret sale of arms to Iran and diversion of proceeds to the Nicaraguan Contras.

(MARCH 4) UPI - Stage two of Soviet President Gorbachev's reform program is taking shape today. Citizens of the Soviet Union's three major republics are jamming the polls today to elect members of republican parliaments and local officials.

Officially... all the candidates are communists. But for the first time in local elections... people have a real choice of who to elect. There's an average of six candidates for every seat and they span the Soviet political spectrum, from radical reformer to independent-minded nationalists.

Gorbachev voted in Moscow today and referred to the elections as a ''people's referendum on perestroika,'' his reform program.

At stake are more than one-thousand seats in the Russian Republic's parliament, 450 places for the Ukrainian legislature and 310 in Byelorussia's parliament. Hundreds more seats are up for grabs in city and regional councils. The three republics represent three-fourths of the Soviet Union.

The official news agency Tass says voter turnout has been high across the country. The Soviet Union spans 11 time zones. First official results are expected tomorrow.

A survey of 882 police chiefs around the country finds that 95 percent of them oppose the idea of legalizing drugs.

The chiefs say the right direction to move in is tougher sentences for pushers and users. The chiefs would favor revoking the drivers' licenses of drug offenders.

Most of the chiefs support an expansion of education programs... starting at the grade-school level instead of waiting until high school.

Half of those surveyed had an officer wounded or killed in a drug-related crime in the past year.

The survey finds that 71 percent of police chiefs favor providing foreign nations with law enforcement assistance. But they are opposed to giving economic aid as a means to relieve their dependence on the drug trade.

When asked who would be the ''most effective'' drug education instructor at school... 37 percent said law enforcement officers... 22 percent said former drug users and 21 percent said school teachers.

(MARCH 4) UPI - A London newspaper reports that top Iranian officials are visiting Damascus, Syria, and Beirut today to negotiate the release of one or more of 17 Western hostages in Lebanon. The newspaper says leading Iranian figures and U-S figures... including Cyrus Vance... have already held secret talks in Geneva and Turkey.

A precarious calm prevails over east Beirut today as mediators try to consolidate a fragile truce to end a bloody five-week-old dispute between rival Christian military leaders. A woman was wounded by sniper fire this morning trying to flee east Beirut to the western part of the capital.

Aides to South African black activist Nelson Mandela are scaling back his schedule because of concern over his ability to maintain the grueling pace he's kept up since his release from 27 years in prison. New York Police say 12 firefighters and eight utility workers were exposed to cancer-causing P-C-B's while they tried to control a fire in an underground transformer in the Bronx this morning. (MARCH 4) UPI - Vice President Quayle denies there are any ''quid pro quo'' talks going on for release of the Western hostages in Lebanon. Quayle says Washington is NOT using Cyrus Vance to negotiate for the release of the hostages. But a newspaper report out of London says leading Iranian and U-S figures, including Vance, have already held secret talks in Geneva and two other cities. The report also says an Iranian delegation is trying to arrange the release of one or more of the 17 captives.

Soviet President Gorbachev says today's parliamentary and local elections in the three major Soviet republics amount to a ''people's referendum on perestroika''... Gorbachev's restructuring program. For the first time in Soviet local elections, citizens have a real choice of who to vote for-with an average of six candidates running for every one seat.

A Colombian newspaper quotes a letter sent by the Medellin drug cartel to a leftist political party, claiming the cartel is being run by a ''new leadership'' that has renounced violence. According to the letter, the cartel says it now rejects ''militarism, torture and disappearances.'' But the cartel does say it has called a ''state of alert'' because of the government's crackdown on the cocaine industry.

More signs of anti-government sentiment in Iran. Rebel radio says Iranian soccer fans sang the country's former national anthem, ''O Iran,'' at a soccer stadium outside Tehran in a mild form of protest against the ruling clergymen. (MARCH 4) UPI - The Soviet news agency Tass reports high voter turnout in today's elections in three major republics...

More reported efforts to free the Western hostages in Lebanon...

And, the return of Andy Rooney...

These stories... and more... next, from United Press International:

The Soviet Union's three largest republics went to the polls today to elect representatives to each republic's parliament and to local councils.

The first unofficial results show that in the Russian city of Leningrad, old-style orthodox communists were cast aside in favor of candidates connected to the Greens, the Russian or Leningrad Popular Fronts, or informal democratic organizations of various stripes.

The Soviet news agency Tass says turnout was high in what Soviet President Gorbachev billed as a ''people's referendum on perestroika''... Gorbachev's restructuring program.

The elections represent the second stage of the Soviet leader's democratic reforms that began last year with the emergence of a largely freely elected national parliament. This election gave voters in Russia, Byelorussia and the Ukraine their first chance to choose among candidates for the regional bodies. In some places, up to 20 candidates vied for one spot.

A winner needs 50 percent or more of the vote... which means many contests will have run-offs.

(MARCH 4) UPI - There are new reports about the possible release of Western hostages in Lebanon.

Iranian sources say a delegation that includes the brother of Iran's President Rafsanjani paid unofficial visits today to the capitals of Syria and Lebanon.

The sources hint that the plight of the 17 Western hostages might have been discussed in the Syrian visit.

And a report out of London puts it more bluntly. The report says the Iranian group's mission is to organize the release of one or more of the captives.

The newspaper report also says leading Iranian and U-S figures, including Cyrus Vance, have already held secret talks in Geneva and two other cities.

That conflicts with a statement today by Vice President Quayle. Quayle denies there are any ''quid pro quo'' negotiations going on for release of the hostages, and he specifically said Washington is NOT using Vance for that purpose.

The crew of the shuttle Atlantis flew back to their homes in Houston tonight following today's picture-perfect shuttle landing in California.

That landing went off as planned when Commander John Creighton and co-pilot John Casper guided Atlantis to a graceful touchdown at Edwards Air Force Base in the Mojave Desert.

Creighton said the crew ''had a great time'' and he called it ''a terrific flight.'' He said they ''accomplished something that was important to the country,'' and said ''the space shuttle performed superbly.''

Close-up television views of Atlantis showed that it apparently came through the mission in good shape.

The Atlantis landing clears the way for the April 12th launch of the shuttle Discovery on a mission to put a sophisticated space telescope in orbit.

(MARCH 4) UPI - Prosecutors in Redding, California, are studying possible criminal charges against a Greyhound replacement driver whose bus crushed a striking union employee to death yesterday.

A police investigator says the replacement driver, Theodore Graham, apparently was NOT aware that he had hit a depot retaining wall or killed striker Robert Waterhouse.

The Shasta County district attorney's office will review officers' interviews with 38 bus passengers and nearly 30 witnesses before deciding on charges.

Yesterday's death of Waterhouse is the worst of the scattered violence that has so far marked the strike that began Friday in a dispute over pay and benefits. NO new talks between company and union officials are scheduled.

Greyhound says 700 replacement drivers plus 11-hundred workers crossing picket lines enabled the company to put 29 percent of its routes in operation as of today. The union says the company has exaggerated the number of workers crossing picket lines.

Jesse Jackson, Alabama Congressman John Lewis and other old soldiers in the struggle for civil rights led a march accross a Selma, Alabama, bridge today in a re-enactment of ''Bloody Sunday.''

25 years ago today, Lewis and 600 other civil rights marchers were attacked by Alabama state troopers as they tried to cross the same bridge on a civil rights march. Lewis was beaten unconscious. The incident helped spur passage of the 1965 voting right act.

At a nearby church, Lewis recalled that he saw ''women and helpless children run down by men on horses.'' The activists sang ''We Shall Overcome'' and marched accross the bridge using smoke bombs to simulate the tear gas the troopers used 25 years ago.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - SPEX Group Inc, the largest producers of consumer events in America, expects $405 million in dollar volume to be generated by their exhibitors this year.

After interviewing exhibitors last season, the company estimates that approximately $45 million in home improvement products and services were sold as a direct result of each event. SPEX will produce nine consumer home improvement events in Southern California this year.

''Our largest event will be the 15th Annual Home Restoration & Remodeling Show at Anaheim Stadium, March 8-11. Over 400 of the major home product companies will be participating,'' said Dan Greene, president of SPEX Group Inc.

The company also publishes Home Restoration & Remodeling Magazine and produces the new fast-paced, magazine format television series of the same name. ''The Home Restoration & Remodeling Television Show'' has been airing for the past two years in Southern California and is entering national syndication this season.

Peripheral companies like banks, savings & loans and loan brokers, home owners insurance etc., benefit because of the high quality of attendees this show attracts. Glendale Federal Bank sponsored seven SPEX shows last year and have resigned as a title sponsor for the 15th Annual Home Restoration & Remodeling Show at Anaheim Stadium.

According to Glendale spokespeople, millions of dollars in home improvement loans were made at last year's events and they expect millions more will be made at this year's events.

According to Peter Castas, executive vice president of SPEX, estimated attendance at the Anaheim show will be about 50,000 homeowners over the four day period. Southern California's home improvement industry is at an all-time high, says Castas, and there is no end in sight for this booming industry.

The SPEX Group prides itself in attracting Southern California's premiere home improvement product and service companies. They have arranged for the attendance of the California State Licensing Board (CSLB), a division of the California Department of Consumer Affairs and the agency responsible for licensing and policing building contractors.

''They will make brochures and informational materials available to attendees, to help them make proper decisions when hiring contractors and signing contracts. Their presence also acts as a deterent to unscrupulous contractors,'' said Greene.

Virtually every category of home improvement is participating in this year's event in Anaheim. Special emphasis is placed on ''The World of Spas,'' a show within the show, with almost every major manufacturer of portable, in-ground, swim spas and gazebos attending.

The SPEX Group is the only segmented marketing company nationally that can offer businesses in the home improvement industry a concise marketing plan that includes print, television and consumer events. According to Povendra the companies' sales figures are expected to exceed $20 million this year.

RANCHO CORDOVA, CA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Baxter Healthcare has agreed to market to its hospital customers new ''slush'' freezing technology by Insta Cool Incorporated of North America (NASDAQ:KOOL) for use during open heart surgery and transplants, Philip H. Coelho, chief executive officer of Insta Cool, announced Monday.

The mini-freezers will be used to freeze into a slush consistency a sterile solution of saline and lactated ringers enclosed in Baxter's triple-bagged, sterile container system. The slush mixture is then used by the surgical team to rapidly reduce a patient's chest cavity temperature during surgery.

In marked contrast to the four to six hours this process takes by standard refrigeration, the Insta Cool freezing technology will take less than an hour to achieve the proper slush state in the saline solution containers.

''Over 250,000 by-pass operations are performed in the U.S. every year and over 700 hospitals perform open-heart surgeries, so there is a viable market for this freezing technology,'' says Coelho.

''Moreover, Baxter has been highly successful in selling a whole range of products, including slush bags to their hospital customers.''

Insta Cool received FDA approval in 1987 to use its technology for freezing human blood. Insta Cool currently designs, manufactures and markets ultra-rapid blood-plasma freezers utilizing the Insta Cool technology. It offers significant cost reduction over other ultra-rapid freezing technologies as well as marked improvement in product quality over conventional freezing methods. Customers include the American Red Cross and major healthcare corporations.

Baxter Healthcare plans to introduce the Insta Cool slush bag freezer at the American Operating Room Nurses trade show in Houston on March 20-22.

This will include the Adobe Type 1 font format and Adobe's font rendering technology. The announcements were made this week at the Seybold Seminar 1990 Spring Conference.

Adobe Type Manager, a software program that allows Macintosh users to display and print PostScript outline fonts on both PostScript and non-PostScript output devices, will be available for users of Presentation Manager, Microsoft Windows and other DOS applications by the end of 1990.

Adobe Type Manager, PostScript and Display PostScript all use the same Type 1 font format to generate type for displays, printers and other output devices. This is the ''rasterizing,'' or font rendering process.

Adobe Systems began shipping downloadable typefaces in April 1986. The entire Adobe Type Library of 134 families is available for both Macintosh and IBM personal computers.

Adobe Systems Inc., founded in 1982 by Dr. John Warnock and Dr. Charles Geschke, has headquarters in Mountain View. ''This agreement confirms the unique position of the Monotype Typeface Library in the world of typography,'' said Rene Kerfante, managing director of Monotype Typography. ''Moving our font technology to standard environments, including Macintoch UNIX, DOS and OS/2, ensures customers will be able to share documents among different computer systems and output devices,'' said Dr. Charles Geschke, president and chief operating officer of Adobe Systems. ''Users will soon be able to use the Adobe Type Library on virtually any computer system.''

Adobe Type Manager, a software program that allows Macintosh users to display and print PostScript outline fonts on both PostScript and non-PostScript output devices, will be available for users of Presentation Manager, Microsoft Windows and other DOS applications by the end of 1990.

''On the Macintosh, there is a standard operating environment and fonts are an integral part of that environment. Therefore, a single version of ATM works transparently with all applications,'' Geschke said.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - General Communication Inc. (GCI) has signed a five-year agreement with MCI Communications Corp. for long-distance telephone services.

The two-fold contract provides for MCI to purchase access from GCI to originate and terminate MCI telephone calls from and to Alaska. GCI will also purchase long-distance service from MCI to carry a portion of calls for GCI customers from Alaska to the Lower 48.

According to Ron Duncan, GCI president, GCI will terminate MCI's northbound Alaska long-distance telephone calls from the Lower 48 to

Additionally, GCI, which previously provided long-distance service primarily through AT&T, will route a portion of its southbound calls to the Lower 48 through MCI's long-distance network. Based on GCI's projected volume of southbound traffic, the total value of its purchase of MCI service and cost savings is anticipated to be worth about $30 million to MCI for the five-year period.

''We're very pleased to have a long-term relationship with MCI. Our agreement will increase network reliability for our customers,'' said Duncan. ''GCI will build several additional earth stations throughout Alaska to handle the increased traffic.''

According to Tom Wynne, president of MCI's West Division, the contract allows a reduction in MCI's cost of terminating calls and originating its 800 service calls in Alaska.

''Cost savings, stimulated usage and new opportunities will benefit GCI, MCI and our end users,'' said Wynne.

1991 production is estimated to be 60,000-70,000 ounces. Direct production costs, low by industry standards, are projected to be less than $220/oz. Phase I development of the USX East and West Oxide Zones entails conventional open-pit mining of 3.1 million tons of ore grading 0.051 ounces per ton and 11.37 million tons of waste. Heap leaching and recovery by standard carbon-in- column adsorption will produce approximately 100,000 ounces of gold in the eighteen months after initial construction.

Current proven and probable oxide gold reserves amount to 645,500 mineable ounces in 18.4 million tons of ore. In Phase II, the joint venture plans to expand production into the northern portion of the deposit following permitting, which is expected to yield a mine life of approximately 10 years. The joint venture is continuing a program of geophysics, exploration and development drilling to expand the open-ended deposits and explore new targets on the 168 square mile property.

HOUSTON (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Mojave Pipeline Co. Monday announced the signing of an agreement with Meridian Oil Inc. for the firm transportation of 50 million cubic feet of natural gas a day for delivery to enhanced oil recovery and cogeneration operations in Kern County, Calif.

The agreement has a minimum term of 15 years.

Mojave plans to construct and operate a 386-mile interstate natural gas pipeline from the Arizona-California border to the enhanced oil recovery fields in Kern County. The proposed pipeline, with an initial transportation capacity of 400 million cubic feet per day, will interconnect in Arizona with the interstate pipelines owned by El Paso Natural Gas Co. and Transwestern Pipeline Co., a unit of Enron Corp. El Paso, which is a unit of Burlington Resources, and Enron are partners in the Mojave project.

Mojave received Jan. 24 an optional expedited certificate from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to build its portion of a joint project with Kern River Gas Transmission Co. Kern River and Mojave will build separate pipelines into California. The lines would merge into one pipeline near Barstow and continue in a single line to Kern County. The combined pipeline will reduce construction costs, lessen environmental impacts and provide economies of scale for its shipper/customers.

SAN JOSE, CA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Valid Logic Systems Inc. (NASDAQ;VLID) Monday introduced the Analog Workbench II, the coompany's next generation analog computer-aided engineering (CAE) design system.

A completely new, open architecture gives the Analog Workbench II tight integration with Valid's full line of electronic automation (EDA) tools and facilitates easy integration of third-party tools.

Other new features include the industry's largest library of user-programmable function blocks, with more than 100 high-level circuit elements for top-down, multilevel design and simulation, and a unique distributed network processing capability to speed simulation by off-loading compute-intensive tasks to the network.

The new architecture of the Analog Workbench II utilizes a Communications Manager to integrate tightly with ValidGED, Valid's schematic editor, and with Valid's physical layout tools. The Communications Manager eliminates the need for translators and allows inter-tool and interprocess communication and data transfer between the Analog Workbench II and Valid's other EDA tools.

The Communications Manager is the backbone of Valid's ''workbench'' concept and represents a key development in the company's overall design framework strategy. The Communications Manager provides the underlying communications ''switchboard between Analog Workbench II, ValidGED, physical layout tools and external commercial and user-proprietary tools.

Valid's workbench concept links different areas of the design process by facilitating multiple views of the data between applications.

This means that Analog Workbench II users have an interactive design environment that supports multiple simulators, communication between applications like schematic capture and simulators, communication between applications like schematic capture and simulation analysis and communication withing applications like the basic tools available with the Analog Workbench II.

Analog Workbench II, Valid has expanded its ''multi-level design strategy'' into the company's analog design tools. More than 100 new user-programmable function blocks allow designers to start at a high-level behavioral description of a circuit before designing at the device level. Implementing these function blocks, the designer can create behavioral descriptions of analog circuits and electro-mechanical devices, such as electric motors and solenoids.

Valid Logic Systems Inc. is the world's second largest supplier of electronic design automation (EDA) systems, with revenues exceeding $170 million in the last four quarters. The company designs, manufactuers, markets and supports a full line of EDA solution-based on industry standard hardware, operating systems and network. Valid products are used to develop electronic systems, including integrated circuits (ICs), application specific ICs (ASICs) and printed-circuit boards (PCBs).

MILPITAS, CA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Quantum Corp. (NASDAQ:QNTM) Monday announced that Unisys Corp. has selected three models of Quantum's 3-1/2-inch ProDrive Series disk drives for use in the systems it will supply to the U.S. government under the $706 million Air Force Desktop III contract.

The Quantum ProDrive 40S, 80S and 170S will be used in the Desktop III systems and in external add-on storage systems which also are part of the contract. According to the terms of the contract, Unisys will supply desktop personal computer systems to the government for a period of up to seven years.

The ProDrive disk drives chosen by Unisys provide 42, 84 and 168 megabytes of formatted capacity and embedded Small Computer System Interface (SCSI) controllers.

The 42 and 84 megabyte drives have average seek times of 19 milliseconds, while the ProDrive 170S features an average seek time of less than 15 milliseconds. All three models provide Quantum's proprietary DisCache feature for even faster data retrieval.

According to Quantum President David A. Brown, Quantum has been a long-term supplier of hard disk drives to the former Convergent Technologies, now the Unisys Network Computing Group (NCG).

Additionally, Unisys currently uses Quantum's ProDrive disk drives in a variety of systems other than those covered under the Air Force contract.

''Unisys continues to be a key customer to Quantum and we are gratified at their decision to extend their working relationship with us. We look forward to working closely with Unisys to meet their data storage requirements.''

Joe Hartman, vice president of government programs/Desktop III at NCG, said the ProDrive disk drives were selected after a careful evaluation of performance, quality and reliability.

''Both product quality and performance were extremely important selection criteria for the Air Force program. The ProDrive products meet our tough standards for quality and reliability and provide superior performance as well,'' he stated.

Quantum's ProDrive Series is a broad family of high-performance 3-1/2-inch disk drives with formatted capacities from 42 to 210 megabytes. All ProDrive Series drives feature average seek times of 19 milliseconds or less and provide performance enhancements such as DisCache, Quantum's proprietary disk caching technology, which can decrease average seek times by 35 percent in typical applications.

Unisys Corp. is a $10 billion manufacturer of commercial information systems, defense systems and related services. It has more than 80,000 employees and 60,000 customers in more than 100 countries.

Quantum Corp., established in 1980, is a leading independent manufacturer of hard disk drives for personal computers and workstations. Its products are marketed to original equipment manufacturers and distributors worldwide.

Plus Development Corp., a subsidiary of Quantum established in 1983, designs and markets high-volume personal computer storage enhancement products through 2,500 dealers worldwide.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - New Visions Entertainment Corp. (''New Visions'') announced Monday that it, its subsidiary, New Visions Productions Inc. and its production team of Taylor Hackford and Stuart Benjamin have initiated arbitration proceedings against Cineplex Odeon Corp. (''Cineplex'') and certain of its subsidiaries.

The arbitration arises out of Cineplex's unauthorized abandonment of the 25-picture, five-year production joint venture between New Visions, Cineplex, Hackford and Benjamin.

The New Visions Pictures joint venture has released one motion picture and has four other features in post-production.

Cineplex has refused to participate in any motion pictures after the initial five.

The arbitration complaint alleges the Cineplex's wrongful repudiation of its obligations has severely damaged New Visions and the other claimants, and seeks substantial compensatory and punitive damages.

New Visions is in the process of arranging for distribution of the four completed motion pictures. New Visions is also in negotiations with third parties concerning its future production activities and the restructuring of its finances. In this regard, New Visions' principal institutional lender has recently agreed to a moratorium on interest payments on New Visions' secured debt through May 31, 1990, pending a restructuring of that debt.

New Visions is engaged in development, production and financing of motion pictures, the distribution of motion pictures to theatrical, pay and free television and other markets.

REDMOND, WA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Microsoft Corp. will provide the TrueType outline font technology in Microsoft Windows and in OS/2 Presentation Manager version 2.0.

The company also announced Monday that Microsoft TrueImage will be the name for its page description language, announced in September 1989, which incorporates the TrueType font format.

Microsoft additionally announced that it is licensing TrueType technology to independent software vendors (ISVs) to allow them to support TrueType fonts in their applications on DOS or other systems where TrueType is not part of the operating environment.

TrueType, informally known as Royal, is outline font technology that allows accurate display of text of any size, at high or low resolution, on any screen or printer. The open format means all hardware, software and font vendors can adapt their products easily to support a consistent set of fonts for both the screen and printer.

TrueType is the outline font technology involved in a cross-licensing agreement between Apple Computer and Microsoft. The companies agreed to provide standard font technology for their operating environments, allowing for an easy exchange of rich text documents (text and graphics) between the Macintosh System 7, OS/2 Presentation Manager and Windows.

In addition, users have to obtain only a single font library for all systems to be assured of type quality previously available only on dedicated typesetting and publishing systems.

ISVs that have announced that they will license the TrueType rasterizer include Aldus Corp., the Microsoft applications group, Software Publishing and WordPerfect. The TrueType rasterizer is the software that executes the commands in the font file to create the fonts used by a printer or graphics display.

Developers will want to license the TrueType rasterizer if their application runs in an environment, such as DOS or existing versions of Windows, that does not have native TrueType support.

TrueImage 1.0 Microsoft's printer software technology, expected in customer products in 1990, will support the TrueType font format. TrueImage is a printer software superset of the POSTSCRIPT page description language.

The TrueImage language uses the TrueType outline font format and provides faster printer and superior WYSIWYG for any application running under Micrsoft's graphic user interfaces.

Microsoft Corp. (NASDAQ:MSFT) develops, markets and supports a wide range of software for business and professional use, including operating systems languages and application programs, as well as books, hardware and CD-ROM products for the microcomputer marketplace.

SAN JOSE, CA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Ramtek has received notification from Unisys Corp., the prime contractor for the U.S. Government Next Generation Weather Radar (NEXRAD) program, that the production option for 165 NEXRAD systems has been exercised by the U.S. Department of Commerce.

Up to 400 Ramtek Model 4660 image display systems, which were previously chosen by Unisys to be the display consoles for the NEXRAD weather program are expected to be installed at approximately 165 locations throughout the United States, the Caribbean and at military bases in Europe over the next three to five years. Each Ramtek 4660 system is configured with two high-resolution color monitors.

Ramtek expects that its contract with Unisys will generate approximately $15 million in revenue over the next few years, although the production option has not yet been fully funded by the U.S. Government.

The NEXRAD systems, designed to replace present 30-year-old vacuum-tube radar systems, will provide meteorologists the latest radar and image display capabilities. Ramtek has made numerous changes and improvements to the system to meet demanding contract requirements for image processing speed, accuracy and operator efficiency.

The speed and accuracy of the new system allows predictions of severe weather conditions much earlier than previously was possible.

Jim Swanson, president of Ramtek, stated, ''This production contract is the result of several years of hard work by Unisys, Ramtek and other subcontractors to meet the stringent demands of the U.S. Government and is an important step in their major upgrade program.''

Ramtek has been providing image display systems to the weather analysis and forecasting laboratories at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) and other weather monitoring programs over the past few years.

Ramtek Corp., headquartered in San Jose, Calif., designs and develops computer display systems for imaging and graphics markets such as remote sensing, weather, seismic, medical imaging, command and control, computer-aided-design and process control.

MIDVALE, UT (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Ballard Medical Products (''Ballard'') and Smiths Industries Medical Systems Inc. (''SIMS'') have reached a settlement in connection with litigation concerning among other things five patents owned by Ballard.

Legal proceedings have been pending in federal district courts in New Hampshire and Delaware. The products at issue in the litigation are multiple-use closed system suction catheters which SIMS and Ballard sell to hospitals for respiratory therapy.

The litigation raised complicated technical issues concerning, among other things, the validity and enforceability of Ballard's patents relating to closed-system suction devices and whether SIMS's multiple-use catheter infringes on any of those patents.

In a commercial settlement, the parties agreed that SIMS would drop its challenge to Ballard's patents and Ballard would not press its patent infringement claims against SIMS. SIMS also agreed that Ballard's patents were valid and enforceable. Certain of these provisions were incorporated in a consent decree filed with the court.

The agreement also calls for royalty payments in amounts which SIMS and Ballard have agreed to keep confidential. The parties also agreed among other things that Ballard would grant licenses to SIMS for the suction devices, thereby permitting SIMS to continue marketing its multiple-use catheters without the threat of patent infringement litigation.

Ballard stated that it was very pleased with the outcome of the litigation and the resolution that was reached by the parties. Dale Ballard indicated that the consent decree confirms that Ballard's patents are valid and enforceable, and that the licensing arrangements support the strength of these patents.

Ballard also stated that it would not hesitate to take similar legal action against any other companies that infringe upon Ballard's patents.

SIMS announced that it was pleased to reach agreement with Ballard, noting that the settlement lifts a cloud that has been hanging over its multiple-use catheters for several years. SIMS indicated that it was eager to move ahead with its marketing program for the devices now that the dispute has been resolved.

Specific terms of the settlement were not made public. For further information, contact Dale H. Ballard, Ballard Medical Products or David S. Buyher, Smith Industries Medical Systems Inc.

BOSTON (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - A telephone hotline designed to give international businesses one number to call for easy access to a wealth of information about international markets, business-to-business services and products was introduced Friday by AT&T and International Strategies Inc.

By calling 1-800-USA-XPORT, companies throughout Massachusetts can gain access to a ''one-stop shopping'' source of timely, customized and reliable information needed to conduct business successfully in more than 50 countries worldwide.

The hotline, open from 9:00 am. to 5:00 p.m., is free of charge and is manned by International Strategies trade specialists with access to a specially designed data base with information dealing with critical areas of international business.

The data base developed by International Strategies with AT&T with information gathered from public and private sources. It is specifically tailored to help companies move their products into overseas markets or find joint venture partners worldwide. Topics covered range from country profiles and economic and political overviews to key contacts, importers, finance and banking, legal issues and taxes, trade leads and barriers, communications and transportation, labor forces, and competition.

If a caller wants information on a particular topic, an International Strategies staff member will use a brief, focused questionnaire to classify tje inquiry to customize the response. The trade specialist will then conduct research and send the results within three working days by electronic or regular mail or by facsimile to the caller.

Massachusetts was selected as the first state for the hotline because of its mix of high technology companies, its mature industrial base and its strong professional services sector. During the hotline's second year of operation, companies throughout New England and selected markets across the U.S. will gain access to it, with the ultimate goal to have the hotline serve businesses throughout the U.S.

Studies by Cognetics Inc., a research firm based at MIT in Cambridge, Mass., indicate the greatest export growth for U.S. firms in upcoming years will occur in companies with between 20 and 200 employees and with annual sales of less than $200 million. The hotline is designed to help companies of this size, said AT&T New England Commercial Branch Manager Thomas Costello.

AT&T is a diversified information movement and management company that offers a wide range of quality products and services to markets in the U.S. and around the world. The financing agreement will fund the construction of a 614-megawatt combined-cycle cogeneration plant to be built in Linden, N.J. and owned by Cogen Technologies.

Separately, GE Power Generation has signed a $98 million contract with Cogen Technologies for the supply of five GE MS7001EA gas turbine-generators and three steam turbine-generators to the facility.

ROCHESTER, N.H. (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Cabletron Systems Inc. (NYSE:CS) Monday introduced the industry's first complete line of fiber optic PC cards.

Through a built-in fiber optic transceiver, the new cards bring low-cost fiber optic networking technology (IEEE 802.3 FOIRL) directly into a wide range of desktop computers including PC/XT, PC/AT, MicroChannel (PS/2) and Apple SE, SE/30 and Mac II systems.

The new Desktop Network Interface (DNI) PC cards are the first fiber optic network cards available for both IBM and Macintosh platforms. They are also the first in a family of Cabletron's new fiber-based products being introduced this year.

''Cabletron offers affordable fiber optic solutions today that will enable end-users to migrate to the fiber networks of tomorrow,'' said Chris Oliver, Cabletron's director of engineering. ''Users planning to move to FDDI can take advantage of Cabletron's fiber optic/Ethernet DNI cards today at the desktop while operating their backbone at FDDI speeds. Cabletron will soon bring the 100 Mbps capability of FDDI directly to the desktop using low-cost FDDI PC adapter cards.'' Card Features Explained

The new fiber optic DNI cards provide drivers for Novell Netware, PC/TCP, Sun NFS, NDIS, FTP and DECNET operating systems. This feature allows end-users to run an application using one network operating system (i.e. Sun NFS compiling a program) while simultaneously generating documents on another (i.e. Novell).

Cabletron DNI cards also incorporate shared memory, referred to as 'parallel I/O' technology. Parallel I/O increases the speed of data transmission by allowing data to move from both the network and the PC to the memory simultaneously.

To further accelerate data transmission, DNI cards operate under 'string move' instructions, which moves multiple blocks of data at one time. By comparison, competitive PC adapter cards are able to move data only one character at a time.

Most significantly, Cabletron's fiber optic DNI cards support the Simple Network Management Protocol (SNMP). This means Cabletron's DNI card series can be managed by any SNMP-compliant management station, or by Cabletron's Remote LANVIEW/Windows management software.

When combined with Cabletron's Multi Media Access Center (MMAC) intelligent hubs and Cabletron bridges, the new fiber optic cards offer the industry's most complete manageable fiber optic/Ethernet network. Case Western Reserve University Implements Extensive Fiber Optic LAN incorporates Apple and IBM PC environments over a fiber optic Ethernet backbone that links PC users with other campus buildings and the outside world with fiber wired directly into the desktop computer. The network includes Cabletron MMAC hubs with fiber optic connectors, Cabletron bridges and, most recently, fiber optic DNI cards.

Cabletron recently installed 800 DNI PC cards at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio. Case Western's fiber optic LAN

''Our campus-wide network presents a unique opportunity to run several types of PC cards. We operate under multiple system platforms including both IBM and Apple. We've been working with Cabletron on a completely fiber network, and the availability of their fiber PC cards was the ideal solution for our needs,'' said Del Klingensmith, director of information services at Case Western Reserve University. Addressing Tomorrow's Fiber Needs Today

Fiber has become the best solution for integrated networking systems where increased user requirements have created greater demand on network bandwidth. Fiber optic networks based on Ethernet and FDDI technologies provide much greater bandwidth to handle this demand. Networks are expected to integrate fiber optic technology extensively over the next five years.

''With the development of enterprise networks, copper-based networks can't handle the growing bandwidth demands,'' said Oliver. FDDI, through its ten-fold increase in bandwidth, provides the best backbone for multi-user networks. We are now supplying a complete line of fiber optic/Ethernet products to meet the needs of customers migrating to these high-speed fiber-based networks.''

Cabletron fiber optic DNI cards are available for immediate shipment. The cards are available with either ST or SMA connectors. Pricing ranges from $399-$949 per card.

Headquartered in Rochester, N.H., Cabletron is a leading independent developer and manufacturer of network management solutions including software, hardware and connectivity products for integrated network systems. The company currently has a worldwide installed base exceeding 700,000 nodes. The publicly held New York Stock Exchange company has reported 157.8 percent revenue growth and 310.1 percent earnings growth annually since 1986.

DENVER (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - U.S. Gold Corp. (NASDAQ:USGL) Monday announced that it has reached an agreement in prinicple with its senior lender which lessens its present liquidity problems, allowing it to move forward with the Tonkin Springs project startup.

In addition, U.S. Gold announced the sale of its interest in the Hayden Hill project to Amax Gold Inc. for $15.7 million, representing $14.85 million in cash and assumption by Amax Gold of $0.85 million in project development costs already incurred.

U.S. Gold said that $10 million of the Hayden Hill sale proceeds will be used to reduce bank indebtedness. The bank together with the company's largest subordinated debt holder intends to make available, with certain restrictions, an additional $2.5 million line of credit.

With regard to the Hayden Hill sale, William W. Reid, president of the company said, ''We believe that Hayden Hill will be a good project, but, as a low grade deposit averaging 0.032 ounces gold per ton, the present value of projected discounted future cash flows from our interest was only $8.6 million as shown by the project feasibilty study.

''By selling our interest today for $15.7 million we have realized considerable upside potential immediately without having to commit to $34 million of new debt which would have been required to finance our share of the project development cost. We will recognize aproximately $10 million in pre-tax profit from the sale. From a financial point of view, this has been a very good transaction.''

The company also indicated that it is continuing to explore alternatives to further strengthen its financial position which could include the sale of additional assets, joint venture arrangements of properties, and equity financing, as well as reaching satisfactory arrangements with its other creditors.

BOISE, ID (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Albertson's Inc. announced Monday that sales for the 13 weeks ended Feb. 1, 1990, were $1.94 billion, an increase of 2.7 percent over the 14 week quarter last year.

On a comparable 13 week basis, sales increased 10.4 percent and identical sales increased 3.2 percent. Net earnings for the fourth quarter increased to $60.3 million or 90 cents per share compared to $51.9 million or 78 cents per share last year, an increase of 16.2 percent.

Sales for the 52 week year ended Feb. 1, 1990, were $7.42 billion, an increase of 9.6 percent over the $6.77 billion for the 53 week period last year. Sales increased 11.6 percent on a comparable 52 week basis and identical sales increased 4.7 percent. Net earnings were $196.6 million, an increase of 20.9 percent over the $162.5 million last year. Earnings per share were $2.93 compared to $2.44 last year.

For the year, gross margin was 22.91 percent compared to 22.33 percent for 1988. This increase was due primarily to the efficiencies realized from the addition of new distribution centers as the store level gross margin remained relatively constant.

Operating and administrative expenses, as a percent to sales, increased to 18.61 percent from 18.48 percent. This increase was due primarily to increases in employee benefits and insurance expenses.

Warren E. McCain, chairman of the board and chief executive officer, stated, "We are pleased to announce our 20th consecutive year of increased sales and earnings. The year was full of challenges with new stores, remodels, a major expansion of our distribution system and new operating areas - Phoenix, Ariz., and Austin, Texas.

"This expansion positions Albertson's for an exciting new decade of continued growth. The distribution centers assist us in providing our customers with top-quality product at the lowest possible price."

During the quarter 17 stores were opened, including stores in Upland, Calif.; Payette, Idaho; and Centerville, Utah; that were acquired. In 1989 a total of 36 stores were opened. Remodels were completed on 15 stores during the fourth quarter for a total of 39 for the year. During the year Albertson's opened a new 267,000 square foot distribution center in Sacramento, Calif., a new 731,000 square foot distribution center in Fort Worth, Texas, and completed a 344,000 square foot expansion of the Brea, Calif., Distribution Center.

McCain further stated that, "In 1990 Albertson's is looking forward to opening 40 new stores and completing remodels on 45 stores."

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - The Motorola Computer Group (NYSE:MOT) Monday announced the Motorola MultiPersonal Computer, a line of non-proprietary computer systems based on the company's reduced instruction set computing microprocessor and designed with the ability to network easily with a customer's existing multiple vendor computers.

The systems are designed to bring many of the capabilities of technical workstations, including high-resolution graphics, to the commercial market at affordable prices.

The Motorola MultiPersonal Computer is a UNIX-based computer system built to adhere to industry standards in architecture, communications, operating systems and application interfaces.

The systems come standard with local area network support and give users concurrent access to multiple applications on a network without requiring the user to know where the application resides or on what type of computer it resides.

The MultiPersonal Computer offers this compatibility at one-third to one-half the per-seat prices currently available on competitive commercial workstations.

Motorola's MultiPersonal Computers are designed for workgroups and support as many as 66 high-resolution Network Display Stations per system. Motorola's Network Display Stations offer superior graphics capabilities in color or monochrome, on displays ranging from 16 to 19 inches.

The RISC technology used in the new systems provides users with performance ranging from 27 to 67.2 million instructions per second. Each system includes one license and copy of Uniplex II Plus, an integrated office automation software package from Uniplex Inc., Irving, Texas.

Uniplex business software is the leading UNIX-based software offering word processing, spreadsheet, database, business graphics and office management applications.

The MultiPersonal Computer also comes with SoftPC, a software emulator that allows all of the thousands of software applications written for the MS-DOS operating system to run without modification at speeds comparable to an 80286-based PC. A special trial copy of FrameMaker is also provided on the system.

FrameMaker, from Frame Technology Corp. of San Jose, Calif., is the leading corporate publishing software for UNIX systems. The demonstration software allows users to test FrameMaker's functionality.
The complete FrameMaker package is available as an option on the MultiPersonal Computer.

Graphics and networking software provided with the system include:

-- SYSTEM V/88, Motorola's implementation of the industry standard UNIX System V Release 3 operating system

-- X Window System (X Window), a hardware-independent graphical environment that was developed by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. X Window gives users concurrent access to multiple applications on multi-vendor networks.

-- OSF/Motif, a window manager developed by the Open Software Foundation that has become the low-level graphical user interface standard for computers using the UNIX operating system.

-- Looking Glass, a desktop manager from Visix Software Inc., Reston, Va., which provides a user-friendly, intuitive ''look and feel'' to the GUI. Looking Glass has become a de facto standard in the UNIX community.

-- Ethernet, one of the most common local area network standards

All of the graphics and networking software available on the MultiPersonal Computer conforms to widely accepted industry standards. The system itself is based on the VMEbus architecture, a non-proprietary bus standard used by hundreds of system and component vendors throughout the world.

''The MultiPersonal Computer is the most open computer system available today,'' said Edward F. Staiano, president and general manager of Motorola's General Systems Sector. ''We are offering a computer built with non-proprietary hardware and software that is extremely competitive in terms of performance, price and quality.''

According to Staiano, many hardware vendors claim to be open by licensing their own proprietary standards.

''The customer's view of open is: 'Can I move my applications or have access to my data on another machine without spending a fortune doing it?' With the MultiPersonal Computer, he finally can,'' Staiano said.

At the core of the MultiPersonal Computer is Motorola's implementation of X Window technology. X Window was developed as a second-generation windowing product that isn't tied to a single operating system or type of computer. X Window allows systems users to share information on a network without regard to proprietary hardware or software.

''X Window and open standards are the way of the future for the computer industry,'' Staiano said. ''Giving customers the ability to put their applications on whatever system is best able to handle it is how businesses want to operate. It will be up to companies like Motorola to provide open systems with the kinds of distinctive capabilities the customers want.''

The MultiPersonal Computer comes in three models: the MPC-100, MPC-200 and the dual-processor MPC-300.

Each system comes standard with MCG's new Motorola Network Display Stations. The Motorola Network Display Stations, which are available in 16-inch and 19-inch monochrome or 17-inch color models, are high-resolution, X-compliant display stations with built-in networking and processing capabilities.

The Motorola Computer Group will market the MultiPersonal Computer directly to large customers and indirectly through the value-added resellers and original equipment manufacturers.

The Motorola Computer Group is part of the General Systems sector of Motorola Inc. It is comprised of four divisions:

-- the Computer Systems Division, based in Cupertino, Calif., markets midrange, multiuser computer systems and software solutions for commercial and government end users, and value-added resellers;

- the Field Service Division, based in Dallas, provides comprehensive service, support and systems integration capabilities for Motorola systems and component users nationwide;

- the International Computer Division, based in Schaumburg, Ill., markets, supports and services all Microcomputer Division and CSD products that are sold outside the United States;

- and the Microcomputer Division, based in Tempe, Ariz., is the world's largest designer and manufacturer of boards and systems based on the VMEbus architecture and markets fully configured systems to technical and OEM computing markets.

BEDFORD, Mass. (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - The Consumer Electronics Division of Philips NV has signed an agreement for the purchase of 1,000 Computervision workstations to be used in the advanced design of its products, Prime Computer Inc. announced Monday.

Delivery of the workstations will take place over the next 18 months. Financial terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

Philips has used Computervision systems extensively over the last 12 years in both mechanical and electronic computer-aided design (CAD) of its consumer electronics. Mechanical CAD applications are involved in designing physical enclosures for products like compact disk players and VCRs; electronic CAD applications are used to lay out and test electronic circuits within the products.

Each workstation, termed a ''Personal Desk Design'' by Philips, provides engineers with access to THEDA electronic design software from Computervision. The workstations' windowing capability also allows users to continue running their current UNIX or MS-DOS based applications.

''The advantages to the engineer are many,'' said Peter Sygall, director of engineering in Philips' Consumer Electronics Division. ''The Personal Design Desk gives our users the performance and the powerful data management features they need in order to perform 'Simultaneous Engineering,' which is key to our overall CAD strategy.''

Simultaneous Engineering brings all the engineering disciplines together at the initial stages of product development. Instead of a sequential approach - taking a product from concept to design, and then finally to manufacture - the product's complete functional requirements are mapped out early, involving all the engineering and manufacturing disciplines. The result is to minimize costly design or manufacturing changes later on.

As a product moves through development, the systems also drastically shorten time-to-market while enhancing product quality by allowing engineers in different departments to share data and expertise.

''By networking our systems through servers,'' Sygall said, ''we can control the data flow between users from different departments as the product travels through the various design stages - processing the product 'in parallel' rather than sequentially and, most importantly, between our factories that can be found in Europe, the Americas and the Far East.''

Philips will provide every engineer in the Consumer Electronics Division with a workstation; currently, some 40 percent have computers at their desks. Each workstation, with a smaller footprint than a personal computer, runs in an industry-standard UNIX environment and has access to advanced CAD applications from Computervision.

Robert Fischer, president of the Computervision Business Unit, noted the close cooperation between Philips' Consumers Electronics CAD support group and the Computervision account team. ''We have developed a strong partnership that has matured over the years.

''We've provided one of the most robust electronics solutions in the marketplace. This latest agreement is a clear demonstration of our position in this area. We regard Philips as one of the driving forces in our ability to bring a leading-edge CAD design application to the electronics market. We're very pleased to be an integral part of their strategy in the highly competitive area of consumer electronics.''

NV Philips Gioeilampenfabrieken, one of the world's largest electronics and electrical companies, is a major producer of consumer electronics, lighting, components, information and communication systems, industrial and electro-acoustic systems, medical systems, domestic appliances and personal care products. Founded in 1891, the firm is headquartered in Eindhoven, The Netherlands, and employs more than 300,000 people.

The Computervision Business Unit of Prime Computer Inc. is the world's second largest supplier of integrated CAE/CAD/CAM solutions, with an installed base of more than 150,000 seats. Based in Bedford, Mass., Computervision develops, markets and supports mechanical, electronic, AEC and GIS applications.

ST. PETERSBURG, FL (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - BELMAC CORP. (NASDAQ:BEMCC) closed March 2 on additional funding of $1 million from a Limited Partnership to further support the research and development of Alphanon, an anti-hemorrhoidal drug, and, potentially, other medicinal compounds.

Prior closings with this Partnership resulted in a total of $800,000 in financing since December 1989. The Partnership is continuing its offering of up to an aggregate of $3.4 million.

With the proceeds from this offering to date, this unaffiliated partnership has purchased a warrant to acquire 568,422 shares of newly-issued BELMAC stock and a six percent royalty interest in BELMAC's international sales.

Approximately one-third of the new capital will be placed in a special escrow acount to be used in the commercialization effort of Alphanon. The remaining funds will be used as deemed necessary by BELMAC's management.

Clinical research conducted under the direction of BELMAC has supported the claim that Alphanon stops hemorrhoidal bleeding. BELMAC believes this transdermal medication is the first such non-surgical treatment to stop hemorrhoidal bleeding and expects that it will reduce the need for more aggressive measures in a number of patients who suffer from this condition.

As part of a restructuring plan initiated by newly-named Chairman of the Board, Jean-Francois Rossignol, Ph.D., BELMAC intends to consider the acquisition of additional pharmaceutical products which would expand the company's product line.

DALLAS (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Dallas-based United Medicorp Inc. (NASDAQ:UMCI) announced Monday that they have entered into an agreement with Educators Mutual Insurance Association (EMIA), headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Under the terms of the agreement, EMIA and UMC are developing what they believe is the first state-wide network designed to provide electronic medical insurance claims processing, management, collection and transmission services for health care providers located in Utah.

UMC will provide all hardware and software required by Providers to participate in the Network and will provide installation and training. This high-tech service ensures that complete and accurate claims are filed by health care providers with EMIA, which will significantly reduce EMIA's payment cycle on behalf of its clients.

EMIA, founded in 1935, is given a number one ranking in the state of Utah, for Janury 1990, by A. M. Best and Co. in both market share and revenue.

G. Ray Miller, United Medicorp chairman and chief executive officer, said, ''To date, we have worked directly with health care providers. Now our arrangement with a major insurance carrier like EMIA will demonstrate our ability to have a major impact on the entire spectrum of the medical insurance claims industry.''

Miller also stated that, ''EMIA processes about $70 million of claims per year, a substantial portion of which should utilize UMC's services.''

Donald W. Ulmer, president of EMIA, commented, ''We see electronic claims processing as the next logical step in our progress towards the highest quality and most efficient provision of this service to our clients.

''United Medicorp has developed the state of the art procedure which should bring our plans from design to reality. We look forward to a relationship which will benefit not only Medicorp and EMIA, but other carriers and a variety of health care providers.''

CHATTANOOGA, TN (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Astec Industries Inc. (NASDAQ/NMS:ASTE) Monday announced sales for the year ended Dec. 31, 1989, of $188,501,000 and a loss of $4,043,000, or $1.09 per share.

This compares with earnings of $6,056,000, or $1.59 per share on revenues of $176,633,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1988. Results for 1989 include increased sales of approximately $12,149,000 attributable to Trencor Jetco, an Astec subsidiary acquired in the fourth quarter of 1988. Weighted average shares outstanding in 1989 were 3,702,000, compared to 3,798,000 for the like period in 1988.

For the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, 1989, sales were $37,823,000, compared to $35,179,000 for the like period of 1988. The fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, 1989, loss was $5,896,000 or $1.63 per share. The company had a loss of $994,000, or 26 cents per share, for the like period in 1988.

The increase of $1,025,000 by Trencor Jetco accounted for much of the $2,644,000 sales improvement in the fourth quarter. Weighted average shares outstanding in the fourth quarter of 1989 were 3,609,000, compared to 3,784,000 for the like period in 1988.

The substantial loss in the fourth quarter, which led to the loss for the year, was the result of several factors, some of which were continuing trends which also adversely affected third quarter 1989 results.

Inventory adjustments, results of a sales tax audit, additional reserves for higher than anticipated health care benefit costs, and a Barber-Greene plant strike and rearrangement of manufacturing impacted fourth quarter earnings by $2,450,000, $297,000, $356,000 and $1,282,000, respectively, totalling $4,385,000.

Other factors which adversely impacted earnings for the year were lower sales recorded in the company's three major divisions, Astec, Barber-Greene and Telsmith, and continued extraordinary legal expense primarily in connection with the ongoing patent litigation with CMI Corp.

The lower sales volumes resulted from extreme wet weather conditions in the eastern United States which negatively impacted the profitability of the company's contractor customer base and ongoing confusion and disruption in the marketplace caused by the continued industry-wide CMI litigation. Competitive price pressures during this time impacted heavily the gross margins and pricing.

Backlog at Dec. 31, 1989, was $27,565,000, compared to $32,941,000 at Dec. 31, 1988, or a 16 percent decrease. 1990 is expected to be a flat sales year, consistent with 1989, but a return to profitability is anticipated.

Astec, a manufacturer of asphalt mixing plants, paving equipment, heat transfer equipment, aggregate crushing equipment, and excavating and trenching equipment is traded over-the-counter and is reported by NASDAQ National Market System under the symbol ASTE.

BURBANK, CA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Dick clark productions inc. (NASDAQ:DCPI) said that its first theme restaurant - DICK CLARK'S AMERICAN BANDSTAND GRILL - is opening Monday at Bayside Market Place, a multi-million dollar shopping, dining and entertainment complex in downtown Miami.

The company developed the restaurant under a joint venture between its wholly owned subsidiary dick clark restaurants inc. and Harmon American Entertainment, a commercial real estate concern based in Secaucus, N.J.

Harmon fully financed the construction of the $2 million restaurant and other start-up costs. The venture has retained experienced foodservice executives to operate the restaurant.

Dick clark productions will share on a percentage basis in the restaurant's gross receipts and will also have a 50 percent stake in the net profits.

The 8,500-square foot multi-level restaurant features several unusual entertainment-driven attractions. A major portion of the first floor area is designed to resemble the set of the popular AMERICAN BANDSTAND television show including a mock television camera with boom, the podium identical to that used by Dick Clark during his 33 years as host of the series and a re-creation of the ''Rate-A-Record'' well.

Various sections of the restaurant depict the decades of the '50s, '60s, '70s and '80s. The '50s area includes an old-style diner complete with a soda fountain. The '60s section resembles a pop art ''cellar club.'' Fifteen television monitors placed throughout the facility will present 100 hours of remastered American Bandstand video footage covering the years 1958-1989.

In addition, an imaginative 18-foot sculpture of rock n' roll stars standing on a bus rises above the main indoor bar. The facility also includes an outdoor dining patio and bar overlooking Biscayne Bay.

Other attractions include digital laser audio recording studios in which patrons can sing popular hits with pre-recorded back-up singers and music from more than 250 songs in the restaurant's audio library. Each recording will feature an introduction by Dick Clark.

There is also a state-of-the-art video studio, where patrons can pay to record their own music videos to any of more than 250 popular songs from the 1950s through the current top-10 charts. Dick Clark will appear at the beginning of each visitor's rock video with a Bandstand-style introduction.

The restaurant also includes a rock 'n roll merchandise store, where gifts and keepsake items will be sold.

Francis C. La Maina, president and chief operating officer of dick clark productions, said that if the pilot restaurant is successful the company plans to open AMERICAN BANDSTAND GRILL restaurants in other areas of the country.

''We recognize there is untapped value in certain trademarks owned by dick clark productions. For the past year we have been actively exploring ways to capitalize on those assets. The pilot AMERICAN BANDSTAND GRILL restaurant represents one of several such programs underway.

''For the past 30 years AMERICAN BANDSTAND has been an important part of Americana. The restaurant capitalizes on the wide appeal of AMERICAN BANDSTAND as the hallmark symbol of popular music styles over the past four decades.

''We are cautiously optimistic that our restaurant concept will provide the company with a new means of capitalizing on the value of the AMERICAN BANDSTAND asset,'' La Maina said.

Founded in 1957, dick clark productions inc. develops and produces a wide range of television programming including entertainment specials, series, movies and game shows.

BOSTON (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - IBM Monday announced that it intends to provide Adobe Systems Incorporated font technology across IBM Systems Application Architecture (SAA) compliant operating systems. This will include the Adobe Type 1 font format and font rendering technology.

This decision was based on a review of customer requirements and preferences, and a comprehensive review of competitive font technologies.

Adobe Type 1 is an outline format for representing fonts, or typefaces, in a way that provides high quality output on any raster output device, such as a printer or display.

''We believe Adobe's font technology offers IBM customers the benefit of a unified font strategy across SAA platforms,'' said James A. Cannavino, IBM vice president and general manager of Personal Systems. ''Today's announcement reflects the positive history IBM has had with Adobe and its products.''

''Adobe is very pleased to be an integral part of IBM's comprehensive system architecture plans,'' said John Warnock, chairman and chief executive officer, Adobe Systems. ''IBM's selection of Adobe's font technology enables IBM users to have access to all the benefits that technology offers.''

Those benefits can include access to the Adobe Type Library of font software for more than 600 different typefaces; the ability to send output to more than 70 devices, including selected laser printers, low-cost/low-function printers, typesetters and film recorders; and support for PostScript output devices from more than 4,000 application software packages. SAA is a set of guidelines for developing applications that run across IBM's major operating systems -- Operating System/2 (OS/2), Operating System/400 (OS/400), Virtual Machine (VM) and Multiple Virtual Storage (MVS).

IBM's implementation of Adobe font technology across SAA operating systems will be compatible with the AIX operating system implementation of Adobe's Display PostScript system. OS/2 supports an open font interface and, as IBM's SAA implementation for PC workstations, will be shipped with the Adobe font technology. Additionally, as previously announced, IBM plans to ship the Royal technology. The open interface will allow support for other font technologies that will enable customers to choose the technology that best meets their requirements.

LYNN, MA (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - GE Aircraft Engines has signed the FY90 contract (with options through FY95) for 404-GE-400 turbofan engines and engine modules to power the U.S. Navy F/A-18 Hornet aircraft.

The lot 14 engine contract for 137 engines and 13 modules is valued at $219 million. Engine deliveries will begin in April 1991 and continue through March 1992, deliveries of engine modules begin in 1991 and will be completed by October of that year.

In August 1989, GE was awarded 100 percent of F404-GE-400 engines for fiscal year 1990 with options for the remainder of F/A-18 production over a total six-year period beginning in 1990. GE competed with Pratt & Whitney for the contract.

GE developed the F404 for the F/A-18 and was the sole source supplier until 1984 when the Navy decided to develop a second source for the engine. Pratt & Whitney supplied 30 percent of the competed engines before GE was again 100 percent of the engines in the current contract.

Jay Browne, general manager of GE Aircraft Engines F404 Project Department said, ''Being chosen as the sole source supplier of F404 engines last year was a significant win for GE, and this signing represents bringing 100 percent of the Navy's F404 business back to GE Lynn.'' GE's F404 engine is assembled, tested, and shipped from the company's Lynn facility.

In 1980, the 16,000 pound (71 kN) thrust class F404-GE-400 engine went into production for the U.S. Navy and U.S. Marine Corps F/A-18 Hornets. The engine also powers F/A-18 aircraft for the Canadian Forces, Royal Australian Air Force, and Spanish Air Force.

The U.S. Navy plans to use a growth model of GE's F404-400, the F404-GE-402 Enhanced Performance Engine (EPE), for its F/A-18 aircraft beginning with 1991 deliveries. The F404 EPE has also been selected to power F/A 18s being acquired by the governments of Switzerland, Kuwait, and South Korea.

A non-afterburning version of the baseline F404, the F404-GE-100D, powers Singapore's A-4 Super Skyhawk. Other F404 engines include the F404/RM12 developed by GE in partnership with Volvo Flygmotor for the Swedish Industrial Group's JAS 39 Gripen and a derivative, the F404/F2J3, selected for India's Light Combat Aircraft flight test program.

F404 engines also power the Rockwell/MBB X-31 Enhanced Fighter Maneuverability Aircraft which is scheduled to be rolled out in March 1990 the Grumman X-29 Advanced Technology Demonstrator, and the French Dessault Rafale flight test aircraft.

MONTGOMERY, AL (MARCH 5) BUSINESS WIRE - Kinder-Care Learning Centers Inc. (NASDAQ Symbol: KIND), the nation's leading operator of proprietary child care centers, announced Monday the results of operations for its fourth quarter and fiscal year ended Dec. 29, 1989.

Tull Gearreald, president and chief executive officer, said, ''We are positioning Kinder-Care Learning Centrs for long-term operating growth, and are pleased to note that revenues grew 14 percent in 1989.

''Child-Care services will be in greater demand over the next decade and Kinder-Care Learning Centers plans on expanding to meet those needs.'' The company ended 1989 with 1,260 centers in operation.

Revenues for the year were $343,868,000 compared to $300,139,000 in 1988. During the fourth quarter, the company recorded an additonal $6 million charge related to the investment portfolio it is liquidating. The company had recorded a charge of $19 million related to the investment portfolio in the second quarter of fiscal year 1989.

The company also announced a $2,615,000 charge related to closing 18 older facilities. Including the impact of the charges discussed above, the company reported a loss of $21,985,000 for the year compared to income of $19,042,000 in the previous year.

''Our portfolio liquidation continues and we believe we have set aside ample reserves for the remainder of the portfolio. Our plans call for up to 90 percent liquidation by March 31 near 1989 year-end market prices -- without taking significant additional charges,'' Gearreald noted.

Occupancy in the company's centers averaged 71 percent in 1989 and 72 percent in 1988. The occupancy comparisons have improved in the first quarter of 1990, and occupancy comparisons for the mature centers (over one year old) are currently ahead of the prior year.

The company ended 1989 with $47 million of investments still to be liquidated. Through Feb. 28, 1990, more than $25 million of these investments have been sold at prices approximately equal to their year-end 1989 market value. The proceeds from the liquidation of these investments have been used to reduce debt.

TAIPEI (MARCH 6) - Taiwan posted a rare trade deficit in February, which slashed its trade surplus for the first two months of the year to 1.03 billion U.S. dollars, a drop of 30.2 percent over the same period in 1989, a government agency said Tuesday.

Exports in the January-February period totalled 9.99 billion dollars, a 5.7 percent rise over the same period last year, and imports registered 8.96 billion dollars, a 12.3 percent increase, the Directorate General of Budget, Accounting and Statistics said.

In February alone, exports grew 22.9 percent over a year ago to 5.04 billion dollars and imports rose 54.2 percent to 5.36 billion dollars, leaving a deficit of 320 million dollars.

It was the first monthly deficit for this export-oriented island since April 1988, the agency said.

Fredrick Chien, chairman of the Council for Economic Planning and Development, attributed February's trade imbalance mainly to Taiwan's purchase of a Boeing 747-400 passenger jet worth of 120 million dollars and of millions of dollars' worth of power generating facilities from the United States.

The imbalance would help lower Taiwan's trade surplus, which hit a record 13.93 billion dollars in 1989, Mr. Chien said, adding that authorities here had planned to slash the country's trade surplus to 6.8 billion dollars this year under a five-year export diversification package.

The trade surplus with the United States, Taiwan's largest trading partner, dipped 30.2 percent to 1.17 billion dollars in the two-month period amid efforts by Taipei to narrow the trade gap, which hit 12 billion dollars last year.

The United States took a 34.4-percent share of Taiwan's overall exports in the first two months of 1990, followed by Japan with 13.4 percent.

The long-standing trade deficit with Japan, Taiwan's biggest supplier, decreased 1.2 percent to 1.08 billion dollar in the same period.

Japan sold products worth 2.42 billion dollars to the island republic in the two months, accounting for 27.1 percent of Taiwan's total imports.

TOKYO (MARCH 5) - Japan's overall color television exports fell 40.6 percent in January from a year earlier to 189,000 units, but exports to the Soviet Union rose 3.7-fold to 27,000 units, the Electronic Industries Association of Japan reported Monday.

Association officials attributed the overall decline to a sharp 85.6 per cent drop in exports to China to 24,000 units. Exports to the United States also fell, 33.5 percent to 11,000 units.

Exports to the European Economic Community rose 41.6 percent to 16,000 units.

Domestic TV shipments increased 2.2 percent to 749,000 units thanks to growing demand for large-screen televisions, the association said.

It said exports of home-use videocasette recorders (VCRs) in January rose 12.8 percent from a year earlier to 1.576 million units, but domestic VCR shipments fell 10.6 percent to 499,000 units.

TAIPEI (MARCH 5) - Taiwan's consumer price index dropped 0.15 percent in February over the previous month, bringing the inflation rate to 3.33 per cent for the first two months of the year compared with the same period in 1989, the government said Monday.

The Directorate General of Budget, Accounting and Statistics attributed the fall mainly to declining prices of clothing and medical treatment despite rises in the prices of real estate, education and recreation.

It has predicted a 3.64 percent inflation rate for this year.

Taiwan's inflation registered an eight-year high of 4.41 percent in 1989, a sharp rise over the 1.28 percent in 1988.

The government has adopted a package of anti-inflation measures including tighter credit and tariff cuts.

JAKARTA (MARCH 5) - Visiting Norwegian Petroleum and Energy Minister Eivind Reiten said here Monday that Oslo was prepared to help efforts to stabilize world oil prices.

"We are very dependent on our oil and gas exports and therefore wish for stable prices... The government of Norway is prepared to help stabilize world energy and oil prices," Mr. Reiten said after meeting Indonesian President Suharto.

He said Oslo has unilaterally cut its production of 1.7 million barrels of oil per day by five per cent for the six months to end in July in efforts to help stabilize prices.

A Norway-Indonesia joint communique issued Monday said Mr. Reiten and his Indonesian counterpart Ginanjar Kartasasmita had explored the possibilities of cooperation in the petroleum industry, downstream activities and the use of ocean waves as an alternative source of energy.

NICOSIA (MARCH 5) - Libya is currently turning out 1.65 million barrels of oil a day, its highest level since 1982, in a test designed to measure production capacity, the Middle East Economic Survey (MEES) reported here Monday.

The authoritative weekly newsletter, in a report by executive editor Walid Khadduri, said Libyan officials believe that with "modest additional investment" output could be maintained at 1.85 million to two million barrels.

"These figures indicate that Libya has a substantially higher production potential than is usually estimated by outside observers," according to MEES.

The current experiment is to be limited to the first quarter of this year. In the final three months of 1989, Libya produced around 1.25 million barrels per day.

Oil Minister Fawzi Shakshuki stressed that the test did not violate Libya's commitment to a daily quota of 1.23 million barrels, assigned by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, as most of the excess output would go into storage.

Based on new studies, Libyan estimates of proven oil reserves have risen from 22.8 billion barrels to 44-50 billion barrels, MEES said.

Estimates of natural gas reserves have increased from 29.2 trillion cubic feet to 43 trillion cubic feet, it added.

DHAKA (MARCH 5) - Bangladesh has devalued its currency, the taka, by five per cent against the U.S. dollar, central bank officials said Monday.

Under the new official rate effective Monday, one U.S. dollar was equal to 33.80 taka against the previous 32.19 taka, the officials said, citing instructions given by the Bangladesh Bank to scheduled banks.

But local dealers said the rate might be more than one taka per U.S. dollar higher on the secondary exchange market.

There were corresponding changes in the taka's exchange rate against other foreign currencies.

Press reports here said Monday's devaluation was the first phase of a 15 per cent devaluation planned by the Bangladesh government by June, when the current fiscal year ends.

The devaluation followed pressure from the International Monetary Fund, which argued that the move was needed to encourage Bangladesh's exports and discourage growing imports, according to finance ministry sources quoted in the press.

MANILA (MARCH 5) - Beer-based San Miguel Corp. (SMC), the Philippines' biggest manufacturing firm, on Monday announced an 18.5 percent rise in consolidated net income in 1989 to 2.43 billion pesos (107 million dollars).

But the company said in a statement that it had amended its financial reporting system to include the activities of firms in which it has more than 50 percent of the voting shares.

Without the proceeds from the sale of investments and properties in Hong Kong and a foreign debt conversion scheme, SMC's consolidated net income declined by three per cent, the company said.

Rising interest rates and additional debt to finance an expansion program were responsible for the decline, SMC said.

The parent company registereed a slight increase of 1.4 percent in its income from operations while the subsidiaries' income rose 12 percent.

Under the new consolidated system, SMC said its net sales increased 19.1 per cent in 1989 over the year before to 36.7 billion pesos (1.62 billion dollars).

The companies in the financial statement include Coca-Cola Bottlers Philippines and the San Miguel Brewery in Hong Kong as well as a local rum distiller, a dairy firm, a meat company and a packaging firm.

The SMC has been controlled by the government since the confiscation of shares controlled by its former chairman Eduardo Cojuangco, who fled to U.S. exile with former president Ferdinand Marcos and returned home in November.

The 56 leading industries reported sales amounting to 45.2 billion dollars (16.7 billion U.S.) in 1988, the department said.

The leading industries included those manufacturing semi-conductors and other electronic components, communication equipment and apparatus, radio and television sets and sound reproducing and recording equipment, as well as oil refining.

There was a substantial increase in production of rubber gloves, and passenger and commercial vehicles, the department said.

TOKYO (MARCH 5) - Japan's Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. Ltd. said Monday it would invest 124 million U.S. dollars in Malaysia over the next five years, making the country its biggest overseas base after the United States.

The company, the world's biggest consumer electronics concern, said it had formed two new Malaysian subsidiaries to produce film capacitors and motors with expected sales of 136 million Malaysian dollars (50 million U.S.) a year.

The first, Matsushita Electric Motor (Malaysia) Sdn. Bhd., is capitalised at 115 million dollars (42.6 million U.S.) and will start producing motors for office equipment and audio-video products at a new plant in December.

The plant, located at the Sungei Petani industrial site in Kedah, will have a production capacity of 26 million motors a year with annual sales of 121 million dollars (44.8 million U.S.) in the first year. Total investment is estimated at 248 million dollars (91.9 million U.S.) over five years.

The second company, Matsushita Precision Capacitor (M) Sdn. Bhd., is capitalised at 30 million dollars (11.1 million U.S.) and is expected to start producing film capacitors from April next year at Batu Berendam in Malacca.

The plant, the company's first producing film capacitors abroad, will have a production capacity of 300 million units a year and annual sales of around 15 million dollars (5.6 million U.S.). Total investment is estimated at 86 million dollars (31.9 million U.S.) over five years.

TOKYO, March 5 (AFP) - Japan's Daihatsu Motor Co. is considering joint production of mini cars with a subsidiary of Italian carmaker Fiat SpA, a company official said Monday.

The official said the company had held talks with Fiat's motorcycle subsidiary Piaggio SpA as part of its discussions with several European carmakers but stressed that the talks were still at a preliminary stage.

Daihatsu, which is keen to follow other Japanese carmakers in establishing a foothold in the European market, recently agreed to scale down its plans to produce cars in Poland with Polish carmaker Fabryka Samochodow Osobuwych.

The two companies, which have been discussing a possible tie-up for several years, agreed to assemble on a complete knock-down basis up to 6,000 cars a year. The initial plan envisaged production of up to 120,000 cars a year.

LONDON (MARCH 5) - The Bank of England intervened on the money market in London Monday morning, selling dollars against sterling after the pound fell sharply, dealers said.

Other central banks had been selling dollars against the Deutsche mark earlier in the morning.

Shortly before 1 a.m. (1100 GMT), the pound had fallen to 2.7991 Deutsche marks against 2.8066 at 10 a.m. and 2.8361 at Friday's close.

But it had improved slightly against the dollar, to 1.6430 against 1.6420 at 10 a.m. and 1.6530 at Friday's close.

The British currency was weakened by pessimistic forecasts in the press at the weekend on prospects for inflation, and domestic political factors including opinion polls which showed increasing unpopularity of the Conservative government.

According to polls published at the weekend, the opposition Labour Party now leads the Conservatives by as much as 18 points, its best showing since 1971.

The government has aroused much opposition, including within its own party ranks, over a new local taxation system, the poll tax.

The announcement at the weekend that the Secretary of State for Wales, Peter Walker, was to quit the government, also undermined confidence.

BONN (MARCH 5) - The number two of West Germany's central bank denied Monday that the bank had already drawn up a plan for German monetary union as the inter-German commission on the issue held its second meeting here.

Helmut Schlesinger, denied on arriving in Bonn for Monday's talks that the Bundesbank had already drawn up a plan for monetary union.

The report referred to by West German weekly Der Spiegel in its edition published Monday "was drawn up at a time when some important information - which we have since obtained - was not yet in our possession," Mr. Schlesinger said.

Der Spiegel had said that East Germans would be able to exchange up to 2,000 marks in cash and 3,000 marks in savings accounts at the rate of one Ost mark to one Deutsche mark.

The inter-German commission set up to prepare for German monetary and economic union held its first meeting in East Berlin on February 20.

No details were released on the outcome of that meeting but there have been several press reports since - denied by both sides - suggesting that they had reached agreement on an exchange rate for the handover.

The reports had said that a one for one exchange rate between the Deutsche mark and the Ost mark would be applied to East Germans' savings and cash in hands, subject to certain limits.

But commission members have stressed that no decision has been taken, and that no decision is expected before East German general elections on March 18.

LONDON (MARCH 5) - Two U.S. firms, electronics maker Conner Peripherals and textile manufacturer Fruit of the Loom, announced plans here Monday to set up factories in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Fruit of the Loom said it planned to build two factories in Northern Ireland employing 250 people each at a total investment of 93 million U.S. dollars.

The first plant will begin operations in Londonderry next year and a site for the second has not yet been chosen, the company said.

Conner Peripherals, based in San Jose, California, said its planned factory in Irvine, Scotland, would build computer equipment and employ 250 people.

Plans to eventually expand the facility could lead to the creation of 1,500 jobs.

PARIS (MARCH 5) - French energy company Elf Aquitaine announced here Monday that it has made its first oil strike in Syria, at the Deir Ez Zor site 400 kilometers (250 miles) north-east of Damascus.

The Attala Nord 101 well, the second dug by Elf Aquitaine Syrie, a 100 per cent owned subsidiary of Elf, is expected to yield 8,000 barrels a day of light, good-quality crude, Elf said in a statement.

Another well is to be sunk at the site in the next few days to provide a better guage of the discovery. Two other explorations, at Khayyer and Es Sjir, are in progress.

Elf Aquitaine Syrie was given rights to the Deir Ez Zor site in December 1988 by the Syrian government and the Syrian Petroleum Co.

Another French oil company, Total CFP, announced in January that it had also struck oil in north-east Syria at a site which yielded 6,800 barrels a day.

MAPUTO (MARCH 5) - Schoolteachers in the Mozambican capital bowed to threats of instant dismissal by the government on Monday, and ended a two-week-old strike without winning pay rises they had demanded.

The strikers met outside one of the city's largest schools, and agreed to return to work on Wednesday.

But they refused to work overtime, and said primary-school teachers would teach only one class instead of the two that they are supposed to take.

Primary teachers receive full pay for teaching the first class, but only 60 percent for the second.

The teachers went on strike on February 19, demanding full hourly rates throughout the primary system and a 100 percent pay rise for all teachers.

They later moderated this to 45 percent for low-paid teachers and 10 percent for others, but the government refused to budge.

Reports from Mozambique's other main cities said that teachers had complied with a government decree that the 1990 school year would begin on Monday and that teachers who failed to report for work would face disciplinary measures which could include losing their jobs.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) - Argentine President Carlos Menem has asked President George Bush to support his economic initiative aimed at battling Argentina's hyperinflation, a White House spokesman said Monday.

Mr. Menem called Mr. Bush Thursday to discuss Argentina's most recent austerity plan, announced in Buenos Aires Sunday, Mr. Fitzwater said.

Mr. Fitzwater said the Argentine leader had called Mr. Bush to give him details of the plan. He said Mr. Bush told him that the United States supported Argentine efforts to reduce its deficit and expenditures.

In January, Mr. Bush sent a letter to Mr. Menem offering support for Argentine Government efforts at stabilizing the economy that is plagued hyperinflation, which was running at 160 percent for just the first two months of 1990.

Responding to guidelines issued by the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Argentine plan calls for reducing the country's expenditures by two billion dollars and the layoffs of thousands of public employees.

Argentina's ambassador to the United States Guido Di Tella said the IMF this week would issue a decision on whether to lend Argentina 800 million dollars.

This would be the second part of a 1.5 billion dollar "stand-by" loan that had been blocked because Argentina had earlier failed to comply with IMF guidelines.

LOME (MARCH 5) - More than 1.2 million voters went to the polls Sunday and elected 69 deputies to Togo's 77-seat National Assembly, according to results published Monday.

Run-offs are to be held March 18 in eight constituencies where no single candidate won a majority.

Interior Minister Yao Mawuliklimi Ameyi said voting took place "in order and discipline."

Togo is one of the few African countries where voters have a choice of candidates, however all belong to the sole legal party, Rassemblement du peuple togolais (Rally of the Togolese People).

In some regions, voters had a choice of up to six candidates. All based their campaigns on issues highlighted by the government, such as national unity and food self-sufficiency.

Although none of them criticized the government, the elections saw the emergence of candidates perceived as having a certain independence because neither the government nor party gave them official support.

Twelve deputies lost their seats, while 36 stood down and more than half were re-elected. Outgoing speaker Ngangbog Barnabo declined to stand for health reasons.

Deputies serve for a five-year term, voting on laws submitted by the government, including the budget, but may not initiate legislation themselves.

They are also expected to "monitor" activities of the government, whose members are appointed and dismissed by the president.

LAHORE, PAKISTAN (MARCH 5) - In a big drug haul, Punjab police seized 370 kilograms (814 pounds) of heroin in the provincial capital of Lahore late Sunday, police sources said Monday.

The haul, said to be the biggest here and with a street value in Pakistan of some 800,000 dollars, was carried out following a tip-off, they said.

Police set up a roadblock and recovered the drug being smuggled in a goods truck from northwestern Peshawar, bordering Afghanistan, they said.

According to the local Newsline magazine, narcotics worth 90 billion dollars, nearly a third of the world's 300 billion dollars narcotics trade, finds its way into the international market from Pakistan.

Most of the drugs passing through Pakistan come from Afghanistan, according to officials here.

Poppy is grown in the northwestern semi-autonomous tribal areas bordering Afghanistan. Opium is derived from the poppy and converted into heroin in clandestine laboratories in these areas.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) - Sunday's elections in three Soviet republics were not multi-party, but they were historic, the State Department said Monday.

"While for the most part these were not multi-party elections, there were nonetheless many hotly contested regional and local races, offering voters a clear choice of candidates and ideology," spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

Elections were held in the Russian Federation, Ukraine and Byelorussia.

Liberal reformer Boris Yeltsin was elected to the federation's parliament and other reformers and nationalists appeared poised for victory Monday.

"This represents an important and indeed historic step forward in the process of democratization in the Soviet Union," Miss Tutwiler said.

BERLIN (MARCH 5) - Extreme rightists clashed briefly Monday evening in Leipzig with partisans of a separate East Germany, the ADN news agency reported.

The clash in the Leipzig streets was on the sidelines of the traditional Monday evening demonstration, which brought out more than 10,000 people, the agency said.

Young right-wing demonstrators, the majority of them skinheads, chased other demonstrators waving East German flags, a symbol of their opposition to unification with West Germany.

The incident took place in front of the Gewandhaus, the city opera house, while the great majority of the Leipzig demonstrators paraded quietly through the streets, urging quick unification of the two Germanies and waving West German flags.

The latter demonstration attracted more than 10,000 people, ADN said, but that is far fewer than last fall's demonstrations brought out.

Meanwhile, in Dresden, former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt called at a rally of the East German Social Democratic Party for German ecoomic and monetary union this year.

He also urged immediate West German aid for East Germany after the latter's elections, in order to get East Germans to stay at home rather than moving to the west.

BUDAPEST (MARCH 5) - Negotiations on the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary stalled last week after Budapest sought a timetable two months shorter than that favored by Moscow, prime minister Miklos Nemeth said Monday.

Mr. Nemeth, quoted by the Hungarian news agency MTI, said the deadlock on the withdrawal agreement concerned "only one clause."

Hungary wanted the 52,000 Soviet troops to complete their pull-out by June 30 next year. But Moscow, while agreeing to withdraw combat troops by that date, wanted to extend the deadline to August 31, 1991 for military engineers, he said.

The Soviet delegation has said that pulling out military technology in the conditions demanded by Hungary would pose problems because of limited rail transport possibilities.

Hungary hopes to sign the accord on the Soviet withdrawal on Saturday, ahead of Hungary's multi-party elections scheduled for March 25.

Mr. Nemeth made his statement after talks with leaders of the 12 parties to field candidates in the elections.

According to MTI, the largest opposition grouping, Hungarian Democratic Forum, at the meeting called for the Soviet troops to leave Hungary in the next three months.

WELLINGTON (MARCH 5) - New Zealand Immigration Minister Annette King said Tuesday the jail term Dr. Elizabeth Morgan served in the United States will not prevent her from entering the country.

Under New Zealand law, people who have served more than a year in jail cannot enter the country without the minister's permission.

Dr. Morgan served 25 months for defying a court order allowing her former husband, Dr. Eric Foretich, access to their daughter Hilary, who was found last month living in hiding with her maternal grandparents in Christchurch.

Dr. Foretich arrived in New Zealand last week to renew the legal struggle for custody of the child, and Dr. Morgan, who has regained her American passport, intends to visit Hilary. Reports from Washington early Tuesday said she might be on her way.

In Wellington, Mrs. King told the New Zealand Press Association: "Elizabeth Morgan was not convicted of an offense nor was she sentenced to a particular period in jail.

"She was put in prison for contempt of court, and under the Immigration Act the ruling about jail sentences does not apply."

Dr. Morgan was sentenced to an indefinite term and was freed after U.S. President George Bush signed special legislation.

BOGOTA (MARCH 5) EFE - Twenty-five Colombians died in political violence at the weekend, just a week before legislative and municipal elections, authorities said.

The death-toll rose to 20 in an ambush Sunday by leftist rebels of the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces. Troops killed three more rebels in clashes following the ambush, which apparently broke a pre-election truce.

Thirteen soldiers and four guerrillas died in the initial combat, in the remote Vichada region, 600 km east of Bogota, the Army said.

Meanwhile, pro-Cuban National Liberation Army (ELN) rebels killed an ambulance driver in Cesar province, some 400 km northeast of the capital, police said.

The ELN, the only leftist rebel group whose election truce has not officially started, also carried out a series of kidnappings of local officials in the same province.

In Puerto Nare, 300 km northwest of Bogota, police said guerrillas of an unidentified group Saturday killed a farmer and three agricultural workers.

The elections are to be held Mar. 11.

SEVILLE, SPAIN (MARCH 5) - Spanish fishermen Monday continued a blockade of three southern ports to protest fines to be introduced for trawling in Moroccan waters they claim form part of their traditional fishing grounds.

The protests affected vessels trying to enter or leave Algeciras, Huelva and Almeria, in the southern region of Andalucia, while hundreds of Moroccans trying to catch boats from Algeciras to Spain's North African enclave of Ceuta were stranded.

The port blockades, which began Thursday, have added to maritime chaos caused by heavy storms and winds of up to 90 km per hour which battered southern Spanish coastal areas over the weekend.

Although Cadiz Provincial Governor Placido Conde Monday allowed a Red Cross boat to carry medical supplies to protesting fishermen in Algeciras, he refused to allow food to be delivered to them.

In protest at Conde's action, some 50 relatives of the men locked themselves inside Algeciras town hall.

The fishermen are protesting a recent agreement signed between the European Community and Morocco, which increases fines for fishing without permits in Moroccan waters to a maximum of dlrs 136,000.

The fishermen claim that the rich waters off the Moroccan coast form part of their traditional fishing grounds and are calling for changes to the agreement.

NEWARK, CA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Ross Stores Inc. (NASDAQ: ROST) today announced the grand openings of five new stores on Sunday, March 18. These are the first of approximately 30 stores that the off-price retailer anticipates opening during 1990.

Ross is adding two new stores in northern California, and one store each in its Seattle, Dallas, and Washington D.C. markets. All five of the new stores are being opened in existing markets for Ross. There will now be 161 Ross 'Dress For Less' locations in 15 states nationwide.

Two of the new stores are in Morgan Hill and Capitola, in the San Francisco Bay Area. Ross will now operate a new total of 29 Ross 'Dress For Less' stores in this market. The company will also strengthen its position as the largest off-price retailer in California. With the addition of these two new stores, it will have 80 locations throughout the state.

In commenting on this growth, Norman A. Ferber, president and chief executive officer, stated, "These five stores represent the start of a period of intensified growth for Ross. The steps we have taken over the last three years to develop strong management controls and build our organization have positioned us to effectively manage an accelerated expansion program for the 90s. In addition, Ross is continuing its strategy since early 1989 of using its updated prototype design in all new stores. The company has also been installing this new format in selected existing locations. Ten stores were remodelled last year, and the new prototype is being installed in five existing locations this spring. "We believe this updated format effectively conveys our merchandise philosophy of price, value and fashion " continued Ferber. Revenues and net earnings in 1988 included $7.1 million ($.47 per share) from the company's share of the sale of the Emu South gold property in Western Australia, completed in the second quaG hKVL(1/8'nn 4 3/8-3/8z+4 3/4! sale, operating earnings in 1988 would have been $.58 per share, resulting in an actual 57 percent improvement in operating earnings per share in 1989 as compared to 1988.

In 1989, the improvement in operating results was primarily due to significant contributions from the company's rutile operations in Sierra Leone, West Africa. Rutile sales volume reached a record 139,000 metric tons with a 20 percent price improvement in 1989 over 1988. Production levels of rutile in 1989 also rose to an all-time high of 128,000 metric tons. The company estimates 1990 rutile production of 135,000 metric tons with average prices expected to increase by 10 percent compared to 1989. Nord has contracted for the sale of all of its 1990 and 1991 production.

Kaolin operating results were adversely impacted by a continuing softness in market demand for its conventional products sold to the paper industry. Accordingly, production levels in 1989 were down from 1988 and sales prices per ton increased only modestly during the year. The company expended $700,000 in 1989 for research and development costs associated with its newly developed family of high value-added products that will supplement Nord Kaolin's current production line.

Furthermore, in December 1989, the first shipments of zircon and ilmenite were made from the Nord Ilmenite processing facility in New Jersey. This operation is expected to be a contributor to Nord's earnings in 1990.

Nord Resources Corporation is a major producer of kaolin, natural rutile (a premium titanium dioxide mineral) and perlite and engages in the production of gold and exploration for and development of gold properties and strategic minerals.

LONDON (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - With the relaxation of trade barriers in 1992, Europe will become the single largest market for scientific instruments outside North America.

United States manufacturers of scientific instruments can now gain access to the European market via a new joint venture, which is announced today in New York City.

Oatencourt Inc., an export development company based in Ann Arbor, Mich., forms the American arm of the collaboration. Oatencourt's president, Anthony Bernard, sees the need for both a marketing and a technology bridge between the two continents if exporters are to succeed. "Using a domestic company to plan your sales, marketing and publicity strategy is not enough. To have an impact in Europe you must also have instant access to local market intelligence," said Bernard.

The European partner in the venture is an advertising and marketing consultancy established five years ago to provide support to high technology companies. Abacus Industrial marketing handles the promotion of laboratory, computing, healthcare and electronics companies. Founder and managing director Graham Sprigg has built the business using his philosophy of employing personnel with qualifications in both science and marketing.

Between them, Oatencourt and Abacus employ staff with degrees and doctorates in physics, chemistry, and biological sciences as well as German, French, Japanese and Spanish linguists. "The rare combination of science qualification, experience in the marketing of high technology products and knowledge of the European market is what today's scientific equipment manufacturer is looking for from his marketing consultancy," explained Graham Sprigg.

Principals from the two joint venture companies will be in New York this week to explain their services to the exhibitors at the Pittsburgh Conference on Analytical Spectroscopy and Applied Spectroscopy being held at the Jacob K Javits Convention Center.

Anthony Bernard and Graham Sprigg will be available for press briefings during the Pittsburgh Conference and in the Press Office on Wednesday, March 7 at 09.00 hours.

PLEASANTVILLE, NY (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - The Reader's Digest Association Inc., today announced that 96 percent of the equivalent stock units (ESUs) held by employees have been exchanged for a combination of cash and shares of the company's nonvoting common stock.

The company offered to exchange the ESUs - or phantom stock - in conjunction with its Feb. 15 initial public offering to reduce charges against future operating profit.

Now with only 4 percent of the ESUs still outstanding, the company said the probability of any substantial charge against quarterly operating profit - after the end of its third quarter on March 31 - will be significantly less.

The company said that based on an initial offering price of $20 a share, the charge to quarterly operating profit for the ESUs is $13.6 million through the offering date. Any additional charges or credits will depend on the selling price of the stock at the close of the third quarter.

The company's historical financial statements included accruals for any appreciation in the value of and dividends paid on ESUs as a direct charge to operating profit. Similarly, any reductions to the value of ESUs were credited to operating profit.

As a private company, Reader's Digest for many years awarded ESUs to employees who held editorial, managerial or other important positions. This practice was similar to stock option plans at public companies.

About 1.1 million shares of class A nonvoting common Reader's Digest stock were exchanged for about 5.6 million ESUs. The cash portion of the exchange was intended to approximate the federal, state and local income tax and other withholding due from employees who accepted the offer.

The company said it has no plans to award ESUs in the future. Instead the company plans to introduce a discount stock purchase plan for all employees and has introduced a stock option plan for senior managers.

Reader's Digest is a global publisher and direct mail marketer of magazines, books, recorded music and other products.

SAN DIEGO (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has granted an Experimental Use Permit (EUP) to Mycogen Corp. (NASDAQ: MYCO) for its MVP(TM) bioinsecticide, a product targeted for control of the diamondback moth and other caterpillar insects that attack cabbage, broccoli, lettuce and a range of other crops.

MVP, which consists of a natural protein toxin in dead cell capsules, is the first pesticide developed using recombinant DNA techniques approved for large-scale field trials in the United States. Because MVP consists of dead cells, it cannot multiply or spread.

Under the EUP, Mycogen will conduct large-scale, commercial trials to verify the performance of MVP when used under a wide variety of use patterns. MVP trials will take place in major vegetable growing regions throughout the United States.

MVP employs Mycogen's proprietary CellCap (TM) encapsulation system that encases biopesticides, much like the gelatin capsule for medicine.

The active ingredient in MVP is a protein produced by a naturally occurring bacterium called Bacillus thuringiensis, or B.t. Mycogen researchers use recombinant DNA techniques to insert the gene that produces the B.t. toxin into another naturally occurring bacterium called Pseudomonas fluorescens.

These recombinant bacteria are then killed with a process that stabilizes the microbial cell wall, forming a biocapsule around each insecticidal protein crystal. When applied to crops, the material kills leaf-eating insects as they ingest the toxin.

"MVP is the first of many commercial products based on the CellCap encapsulation system that Mycogen plans to register and introduce to control insect pests," says Al Kern, Ph.D., executive vice president, commercial division, of Mycogen. "MVP is highly specific and does not adversely affect nontarget organisms or the environment. It is an ideal alternative or complement to many chemical insecticides."

Mycogen's small-scale field tests with MVP during 1988 and 1989 showed that the biopesticide gave excellent control of diamondback moths and other caterpillar pests. Field data verify that MVP delivers higher levels of insecticidal activity longer than non-encapsulated biopesticides after which it readily biodegrades.

"We have significantly enhanced the performance of a naturally occurring insecticide," Kern says. "We believe our novel bioinsecticides will give farmers a reliable, effective and environmentally sound means of pest control."

Mycogen Corp. is a pest control company engaged in the research, development and commercialization of biopesticides and other effective and environmentally sound products for the control of insects, weeds, and nematodes. The company develops its products through the application of genetic engineering technology and innovative formulations of naturally occurring microorganisms, fatty acids and oils.

PITTSBURGH (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Ground has been broken for a 37,000-square-foot addition to Genix Enterprises' 52,000-square-foot computer center in suburban Pittsburgh, it was announced today.

The expansion, due to be completed in April 1990, is required to accommodate increased demand for the company's computer outsourcing services.

Through its data center, Genix Enterprises provides customers with all required mainframe computer capacity, on-line and off-line data storage and management, systems software support, and data telecommunications network management. By taking responsibility for these items, Genix eliminates the need for its customers to operate mainframe computers in-house.

The 37,000-square-foot, single-story addition to Genix's existing facility will include 32,000 square feet of raised flooring that will be utilized for mainfrance computer hardware and associated equipment such as front end processors, direct access storage devices, telecommunications equipment and tape and cartridge vaults. The remaining 5,000 square feet will be dedicated to mechanical and electrical machine areas that will support the addition's environmental controls. This equipment includes a 900 Kw uninterruptible power system (UPS) and two, 1,500 Kw diesel generators, batteries, as well as coolant pumping equipment and smoke, heat and moisture detection systems. This equipment will ensure that Genix can continue to provide highly reliable service to its customers in the event of natural or man-made disasters.

According to Genix Enterprises' President and Chief Executive Officer Thomas Mavor, the expansion is necessary to enable Genix to handle the continued double-digit growth in its computer operations outsourcing business.

Says Mavor, "Increasingly, corporations are realizing that operating mainframe computers is a distraction that adds little value to their business. Genix's service allows organizations to eliminate in-house computer operations and concentrate instead on applications development and maintenance. The new space we are adding to our existing facility is an outward example of the demand we are finding for our services as corporations concentrate on integrating their business strategies and information technology strategies and take advantage of the shared resources and technical talent we can provide."

Genix Enterprises is a wholly owned information services subsidiary of National Intergroup Inc. (NYSE: NII), a diversified distribution and services firm. Genix provides computer processing outsourcing services to firms in a wide variety of industries.

#90064p0069 03/05/1990 ~PR Newswire

ROCKVILLE, MD (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Sage Software Inc. (NASDAQ-NMS: SGSI) today introduced the Sage Professional Editor.

By Redefining the role of the programmer's editor with virtually limitless capacity and a windowing, mouse driven interface, the editors of the 80's have become obsolete. According to Kevin Burns, president and chief executive officer of Sage Software, "Every programmer has an editor, so the market opportunity is huge. But to get developers to switch editors, we had to set new standards for power and ease of use and make the switch painless."

Windowing Interface With Built-In Mouse Support - The Sage Professional Editor includes built-in mouse support and an advanced user interface with point-and-shoot help capabilities. Although a mouse is completely and elegantly supported, the Editor can be commanded using keyboard commands for those programmers who prefer not to use a mouse. A bundled Microsoft mouse is available as an option.

The Sage Professional Editor is completely configurable and extensible. Every feature can be turned on or off to suit the user. The user can configure the interface as a clean screen or can selectively enable overlapping windows, tiled windows, custom color combinations, pull-down menus, rulers, scroll bars, line numbers, etc. Using a mouse, the user can scroll, zoom, shrink a window to an icon, manipulate blocks in lines or columns and quickly edit text. The extension language source code for the menuing system, mouse interface, help facility and many other services is included with the Editor.

Operates With MS-DOS, OS/2 and Local Area Networks - The Sage Professional Editor runs under both MS-DOS and OS/2. Both versions, as well as a dual-mode version, are included with every copy of the Editor. Developers who are using both MS-DOS and OS/2, as well as those who are thinking of switching to OS/2 will be able to use the same editor in both environments. The Editor is also compatible with all major Local Area Networks.

Painless Transition From Other Editors - The Sage Professional Editor is shipped with turnkey emulations of other popular editors so that users can immediately take advantage of its increased capabilities without having to learn new commands. The editors emulated include: Wordstar, Brief, Vi, EMACS, and Epsilon. The source code for these emulations (written in the Editor's extension language) is supplied with the Editor. A translator is included to translate Brief macros into the Sage Professional Editor extension language.

Highest Capacity In The Industry - The Sage Professional Editor can edit huge files (up to 100 Megabytes) in as many as 256 windows. It makes maximum use of memory (including expanded memory), and yet is able to shrink itself down to just four kilobytes when the user wishes to run other programs from within the Editor. The Sage Professional Editor has unlimited "Undo" capabilities to reverse editing changes. If the user changes his mind again, the Editor allows unlimited "Redo" to reinstate changes that were "undone."

C-Like Extension Language - The Sage Professional Editor uses a standard extension language that is very much like the C programming language. This language is 100 percent compatible with PolyAWK, Sage's "Toolbox Language" that is an MS-DOS and OS/2 extension of the new AWK language available on the UNIX operating system. The supplied function library gives the user access to almost every editor capability from mouse clicks to menus and word processing features. The extension language includes a compiler and a debugger that programmers find immediately intuitive.

An Integration Frontplate For All Development Tools - In software development teams, the editor has become the central focus of the developing environment. Programmers spend more time using their editor than using any other development tool. Because of this, prior generation editors became a bottleneck hampering the productivity of talented developers.

The Sage Professional Editor can serve as a stand-alone high- performance editor, and it can also be the integration frontplate for all user's development tools. The Editor's architecture allows it to be the programmer's control window for other Sage Workstation products such as the Polytron Version Control (PVCS), PLink86+, and PolyMake. The built-in seamless integration capability of the Sage Professional Editor with PVCS is an example of how cleanly external programs can be interfaced with the Editor. (PVCS itself is not included with the Editor.) Other vendors' development tools, such as compilers and debuggers, can also be invoked without leaving the familiar environment of the Editor. This integration capability provides a long-term solution to the customers' need for a unifying interface to the rapidly evolving software development environment on personal computers.

Compatible With All Programming Languages - The Sage Professional Editor is designed for all developers whether they are developing government software in Ada, business applications in COBOL, commercial software in C, scientific programs in FORTRAN, or software in any other language.

Single-Users Licenses, Project Licenses, and Site Licenses - Three types of licenses are available. An individual developer can purchase a single-user license for $295. Or purchase the Editor with a Microsoft mouse included for $395. Economical Project Licenses allow entire development teams to standardize on this next-generation editor. Site Licenses allow a company to provide the Editor to all developers at a site for a fixed fee.

30-Day Money Back Guarantee - The Sage Professional Editor will ship on March 19, 1990 and will be available directly from Sage and authorized dealers. The Editor comes with a 30-day money-back guarantee. For more Broadest Line Of Desktop Development Tools In The Industry - Sage Software Inc. has the broadest line of CASE tools for MS-DOS, OS/2, Local Area Network, and MVS environments. There are over 10,000 company sites and over 65,000 developers using Sage's market-leading tools including the APS application generators, PVCS, PolyMake, Dan Bricklin's Demo II, and PLink86+. RESTON, VA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Systems Center Inc. (NYSE: SMX) today announced the signing of a definitive agreement to acquire exclusive worldwide marketing rights and related assets of NET/MASTER, a family of network and systems management products from Cincom Systems Inc. of Cincinnati.

The agreement calls for the assumption of Cincom's NET/MASTER customer base and worldwide marketing rights, with an estimated value of $43.5 million. In addition, over 125 Cincom employees dedicated to the NET/MASTER products will be given the opportunity to transfer to Systems Center.

This announcement follows a Systems Center disclosure in December 1989 that the company had signed a definitive agreement to acquire the owner and developer of the NET/MASTER products, Software Developments

International Pty. Limited (SDI) of Australia. In 1984, SDI licensed exclusive worldwide marketing rights to Cincom for the NET/MASTER products outside of Australia and New Zealand. Systems Center estimates the combined SDI and Cincom annual revenues for the NET/MASTER products are more than $35 million, with Cincom directly responsible for approximately $26 million in 1989.

Systems Center Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Robert E. Cook stated, "The value of this transaction compares quite favorably to other recent industry acquisition multiples." Cook added, "This transaction brings all NET/MASTER development, support, and marketing under one roof, providing users a unified network and systems management resource for the 1990s. The prospect of augmenting our networking staff with experienced NET/MASTER employees from Cincom furthers our commitment to customer needs and product support."

Cincom will continue to sell the NET/MASTER products, as well as service and support the current NET/MASTER client base, pending completion of the transaction with Systems Center. At that time, Systems Center will immediately begin supporting the client base, and will also begin marketing NET/MASTER under an interim agreement with SDI, which will remain effective until the SDI closing.

Cincom President and Chief Executive Officer, Thomas M. Nies said: "By selling the NET/MASTER marketing and support rights, Cincom will be in a much better position to concentrate more resources on our core technologies of relational data base, high level languages and manufacturing software to the IBM and Digital markets. We believe this is one of those rare transactions where everyone involved is a beneficiary."

ROCHESTER, NY (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Rochester Telephone Corp. announced today that it has singed a letter of intent to purchase the S&A Telephone Co. of Allen, Kan.

The joint announcement was made by David C. Mitchell, president of Rochester Tel's Telephone Group, and Arthur D. Biggs, president of S&A Telephone.

The purchase represents Rochester Tel's first acquisition in Kansas and its entry into a third new state within the past month. In February the company announced it had signed letters of intent to acquire telephone properties in Alabama and Iowa.

S&A Telephone serves about 800 access lines in a territory 30 miles southwest of Topeka, Kan. Through an associated corporation, ADB Inc., it also owns a 13 percent interest in the Topeka cellular Metropolitan Service Area.

"We're pleased that our first company in Kansas is a company of the caliber of S&A," Mitchell said. "It's been owned and managed by the Biggs family for a half century. While smaller than our other telephone subsidiaries, S&A's significant holding in the Topeka cellular market was an important consideration in our purchase.

"S&A will be our 16th Midwestern property, most of them acquired within the past year. We will continue to look at other companies in Kansas and the Midwestern region."

Biggs said S&A customers will benefit from the affiliation with Rochester Tel.

"It's a fine company, with a great commitment to customer service," he said. "We're proud to be associated with them."

The purchase is subject to the approval of Rochester Tel's board of directors and certain regulatory agencies. No purchase price was disclosed. Johnson, Crowley & Associates represented S&A in the transaction.

Rochester Telephone's principal operating territory is a six-county area in Western-Central New York State. It operates four other telephone companies in New York, five in Pennsylvania, five in Illinois, three in Michigan, three in Wisconsin and two in Indiana. Four other acquisitions, in Illinois and Iowa, Wisconsin and Alabama, are pending. When these are completed, Rochester Tel will be serving more than 630,000 access lines in nine states.

BASKING RIDGE, NJ (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Nokia Inc. reported that its Finnish-based parent company The Nokia Group's net sales for 1989 totalled $5.64 billion ($5.39 billion in 1988).

Based on comparable figures adjusted for divestments and changes in exchange rates during the year, this represented growth of almost 9 percent.

The electronics business groups accounted for 62 percent (60 percent in 1988) of net sales, Cables and machinery for 19 percent (18 percent in 1988), and Basic Industries for 19 percent (22 percent in 1988).

Nokia's North American businesses cover a wide range of activities including mobile and communications products and services, industrial machinery, industrial rubber and basic consumer goods. It has manufacturing, research and marketing operations throughout the U.S. and Canada.

Nokia continued to divest itself of operations whose strategic importance to the group had declined. Last year it sold Nokia Floorings and Nokia Rubber's conveyor belt manufacturing operations.

The group's profit before tax and minority interests was $149.5 million ($269 million in 1988). The decline was partly due to the 1988 figure including substantial non-recurring profit items.

Despite a high level of investment the group's liquid funds at year-end totalled $792 million ($743 million in 1988). The net debt-to-equity ratio was 81 percent (68 percent in 1988).

The group's investment in fixed assets totalled $330 million ($322 million in 1988), or 6 percent of net sales.

R&D expenditures were $285 million ($258 million in 1988). R&D remains particularly high in the electronics sector, where it amounted to 7.5 percent of net sales (in terms of Finnish markkas).

The company employed an average of 41,300 personnel in 1989, 7 percent less than in 1988. Some 50 percent of Nokia employees work outside of Finland.

The board will propose at the annual general meeting on April 2 that a dividend of 0.69 cents per share be paid for 1989. The dividend for 1988 was 0.79 cents.

Mooradian will serve as Micracor's chairman, chief scientist as well as chairman of the company's scientific advisory Board.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - John Wiley & Sons, Inc. (NASDAQ-NMS: WILLA), publishers, announced today that revenues for the third quarter of fiscal 1990 ended Jan. 31, 1990 increased 5 percent to $73.6 million compared with $70.0 million for the prior year's third quarter. Year-to-date revenues increased 6 percent to $213.0 million compared with $200.7 million for the prior year.

Net income for the third quarter of fiscal 1990 was $1.4 million or $.30 per share compared with $1.5 million, or $.34 per share for the prior year's third quarter. Net income for the first nine months of fiscal 1990 was $3.0 million, or $.66 per share compared with $4.6 million, or $1.07 per share for the prior year's similar period.

Revenue increases for both the quarter and year-to-date were largely attributable to the Alan R. Liss life sciences publishing division acquired by Wiley in June 1989, offset by the loss of revenues associated with Milady Publishing, which was sold in the fourth quarter of fiscal 1989, and the occupational and certain nursing lines sold during the second quarter of fiscal 1990.

A major contributor to the third quarter and year-to-date decline in earnings compared with the prior year was the financing and amortization of other costs related to the Liss acquisition. Liss' operating results, however, continue to exceed the company's expectations. Also contributing to the decline were lower earnings from Wiley's domestic educational publishing sector and planned increases in the publishing group's operating expenses. The training group's results of operations reflect improvement over the prior year due to a strong international performance.

As reported in the second quarter, fiscal 1990 year-to-date results include an unusual gain of $8.9 million reflecting the gain on the sale of the occupational and certain nursing publishing lines of $25.9 million reduced by $17.0 million of pre-tax charges relating to the restructuring and rationalization of certain product lines. The after- tax effect of the unusual items amounts to a net gain of $98,000, or $.02 per share, due to lower tax benefits related to the unusual charges.

Founded in New York in 1807, John Wiley & Sons is an independent, global publishing company that specializes in scientific and technical books and journals, professional and trade books and subscription services, and educational textbooks and packages for colleges and universities. WILMINGTON, DE (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Du Pont (NYSE: DD) purchases from minority firms increased during 1989 to a record $175 million, it was announced today by Nicholas Pappas, executive vice president and chairman of the Affirmative Action Committee.

The 1989 total represents a 23 percent increase from 1988 and compared to the previous record of $145 million set in 1985. The purchases were made from minority-owned or minority-controlled firms in the United States and Puerto Rico.

"The 1989 results exceeded expectations and were the result of strong performance through every major sector of the company," Pappas said. "Unless there is a major change in business conditions, we believe we will soon increase our purchases from minority vendors beyond the $200 million mark."

Du Pont instituted the program in 1973 as a means of supporting economic growth in minority communities. The company is pledged to achieve average

ST. PETERSBURG, FL (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Talquin Corporation, the development subsidiary of Florida Progress Corporation (NYSE: FPC), announced today the sale of over 3,200 acres of South Florida citrus groves to Via Tropical Fruits, Inc. of Indiantown, Fla.

Talquin purchased the property -- consisting of a 3,000 acre grove in Indiantown (Martin County) near Lake Okeechobee and a 230 acre grove in St. Lucie County, 12 miles west of Fort Pierce -- about six years ago. The groves produce mostly oranges with some grapefruit. Much of the fruit is used for frozen concentrate. Although the groves were purchased as a real estate investment, they have been a profitable business for Talquin. Current market conditions favored selling the property.

"Citrus has been an excellent business for us. The groves have been steady income-producers," Joseph F. Cronin, president of Talquin, said. "We just feel the best time to cash in the value that we have built in this investment is now."

Talquin will realize the earnings from the current citrus crop during 1990.

The gain on the sale of the land and trees will be recognized in two annual installments in the first quarters of 1990 and 1991. The total effect on after-tax earnings over the two-year period is expected to be approximately $10 million.

Talquin has no other investments in citrus properties.

GRAND RAPIDS, MI (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - X-Rite, Incorporated (NASDAQ-NMS: XRIT), a Grandville, Mich.-based instrument manufacturing company, today announced the introduction of two instruments that achieve the highest level of color measurement using current technology.

These instruments, a reflection spectrophotometer and a reflection spectrocolorimeter, are the smallest known portable instruments of their kind in the world. The hand-held instruments rival larger, more expensive laboratory bench-top units in accuracy and flexibility.

With the new instruments, X-Rite now can offer an entire line of products that satisfy the needs of any industry that must have precise measurement of color and appearance. The instruments will be sold to paint, plastics, textiles, packaging and other industries where in-plant measurements could not previously be made because of size and cost restraints.

"Our Model 948 spectrocolorimeter and our Model 968 spectrophotometer are the culmination of two years of research and development," said Ted Thompson, president and chief executive officer of X-Rite. "I am particularly proud of our engineering and design department for completing this project in record time. People in our industry weren't expecting these products for another nine months."

Thompson said the instruments have a wide variety of uses, for instance, by an auto manufacturer that wishes to precisely coordinate the color plastic components with paints made by other suppliers.

The new instruments analyze the visible light spectrum reflected from a surface by dividing it into multiple segments and then computing precise values relating to eye response. The devices split light into components similar to the way that a prism breaks light into its various colors.

X-Rite Incorporated also manufactures silver recovery equipment, shrink packaging equipment, an X-ray marking system and instruments for the medical, graphic arts, photographic and microfilm industries throughout the world.

Shares of X-Rite common stock are traded publicly in the NASDAQ National Market System under the symbol XRIT.

PHILADELPHIA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Terry L. Troupe, vice chairman and head of Meridian Bancorp Inc.'s (NASDAQ: MRDN) financial services group, has announced that the company's title insurance subsidiary, American Title, has relocated its national accounts group from Florida to the Freedom Business Center in King of Prussia, Pa.

The relocation from Miami to a 3,400-square-foot office at 630 Freedom Business Center Drive will bring the national accounts staff closer to the northeast financial markets and to a majority of their corporate customers many of whom are located in the Boston to Washington corridor.

American Title is one of the nation's largest title insurers. Licensed to operate in 45 states, American Title has 100 branches and 2,500 independently owned agencies throughout the nation, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and The Bahamas. Although the title insurance business is best known for its role in residential mortgages, the commercial title business has boomed as corporations grow and expand their operations nationwide.

American Title's national account customers include some of the nation's largest hotels, fast food corporations and other "Fortune 500" companies, as well as residential lenders and law firms involved in nationwide real estate transactions. Such companies are continually expanding and setting up new franchises, activities involving thousands of transactions annually.

This is particularly true of competitive giants like fast food corporations which may set up hundreds of franchises simultaneously in areas as geographically diverse as Maine and California.

According to Jon R. Gundling, national accounts director and head of the new office, such companies need an underwriter with an in-depth understanding of local real estate practices which can vary as much as the climate. A commercial title insurer should also help them quickly resolve issues like multistate financing, bankruptcies, leveraged buyouts and other forms of special coverage.

"Businesses wanting to establish multiple operations or franchises need commercial underwriters with both national linkages and local connections and expertise," he said.

Business from those customers has enabled the American Title's National Accounts business to grow eight-fold since the unit was officially formed three years ago and 30 percent in the last year. Gundling attributes this success to three factors: legal underwriting expertise, sophisticated technology, and prompt personal service.

"We define service very broadly," said Gundling, an attorney and real estate specialist who joined American Title in 1984. Gundling leads a staff which includes attorney/underwriters, paralegals and sales and support staff. This blend of legal expertise, technical efficiency and customer service help them resolve both entire deals and individual issues. Such issues range from resolving an underwriting variance to explaining practices and premiums to a customer.

Where other title insurers give customers responsibility for contacting their local title agents, American Title's National Accounts team manages the national linkage, coordinating all transactions for the customer.

The staff are assisted in this coordination by a computer system which includes a sophisticated copyrighted software package called "On Trac" -- for national accounts tracking -- the system includes a nationwide network of terminals available to key customers and a dedicated fax machine. Orders sent in by the customer or local title agent are processed by national accounts coordinators who maintain ongoing and, if necessary, daily contact.

Transactions are also speeded along because Gundling reports directly to the company's chief executive officer, John W. Tagge. "Our customers don't have to work up the ladder to get decisions made," Tagge said, "they're already at the top."

Customers contacting the National Accounts office get fast answers on who can best resolve their problems, be it a staff attorney in a regional divisional office or a senior underwriter in the home office, he added.

Gundling said customers usually find that their preliminary title work is completed within 10 days. More important to customers, however, is the date they are given for completion, Gundling emphasized. "If we commit to it, we do it," he said. "If we don't, we both know they can lose dollars on construction costs and the days they could have been open for business."

According to Gundling, customer service goes beyond the business transaction. The National Accounts staff, together with local agents hold seminars for customers to help unravel local procedures and give them a better understanding of zoning, environmental and other issues related to their situation.

Such understanding helps prepare customers before moving to a new area and further insures them against possible violations or legal problems that could arise long after the title transaction is completed.

Called "doers meetings," the sessions sometimes include outside experts who might take participants to the court house to do a title search.

With multiple customers represented within any industry, questions of confidentiality may arise. Gundling emphasized that confidentiality is "given top priority with our staff and is assured by safeguards built into our systems."

The National Accounts sales program is built on basic rules of good service such as calling a customer back before the said deadline. It is also aggressive, a quality unusual in a business tied to the legal system.

"We're far more customer-oriented than our competitors," said Thomas M. Comerford, vice president and a member of the National Accounts sales team. "I put customers' programs together only after asking them 'What do you need that you're not getting?'"

According to Comerford, American Title's greatest appeal for customers is its centralized coordination. "I describe it to customers as 'mission control'," he said, adding that the system helps customers pinpoint their deadlines more accurately.

With closer proximity to customers from the new Philadelphia base, Gundling is anticipating another 30-40 percent increase in business over the next year.

ATLANTA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Standard Auto Bumper Corp. has agreed to undertake a comprehensive study to determine the extent of contamination at its facility in Hialeah, Fla.

The study will include a selection of alternatives from which a cleanup method will be chosen.

Standard Auto Bumper was placed on EPA's National Priorities List of hazardous waste sites in 1989.

Contamination primarily was caused by nickel and chrome waste from the company's bumper replating operation. Much of the contaminated soil already has been removed and properly disposed of under an earlier agreement between the company and EPA.

Greer C. Tidwell, the EPA regional administrator, said the agreement is evidence of a growing trend among responsible parties to handle such matters themselves.

"This means EPA does not have to use public money from the Superfund and the company saves the time and expense of paying its costs and ours in a cost recovery enforcement action," Tidwell said.

A public meeting will be held when EPA proposes a cleanup alternative based on the study.

THE WOODLANDS, TX (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. (AMEX: MND) today announced it spent $16.7 million in its fiscal 1990 year to acquire varying working and royalty interests in oil and gas properties in Texas and other states. The purchases add approximately 14 billion cubic feet of gas and 1.4 million barrels of oil to the company's proved and probable reserves at an average cost of about $4.50 per barrel of oil equivalent.

In the largest single transaction, Mitchell paid $7 million to purchase working interests ranging from 35 percent to 50 percent in 17 wells and nearly 2,900 acres of associated leases in Leon County, Texas. Previously, Mitchell operated 13 of the wells and held interests in all of them. NEW HOLLAND, PA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Ford New Holland's North American overall market share for agricultural tractors reached an all-time high during 1989, according to Robert F. Moglia, chairman and chief executive officer.

"Our company performed well during the past year, considering overall industry sales were down 2.5 percent from 1988," Moglia said. "It was a profitable year and we have every reason to believe that our progress will continue during the current year."

Record market shares for 30- to 60- and for 60- to 100-horsepower farm tractors sparked the company's 1989 performance. Also, the over-100 horsepower market share was the best since 1970. Retail sales of hay and harvesting equipment during 1989 also outperformed the industry.

According to company estimates, Ford New Holland ended 1989 asthe North American sales leader in several product categories including square balers, forage equipment, mower-conditioners, grinder-mixers, windrowers, bale wagons, rakes, mowers and spreaders.

Those successes offset a decline in Ford New Holland's industrial tractor sales, attributed to the late availability of the company's new "C" Series line introduced in 1989. That situation is expected to reverse itself in 1990.

Outside North America, the company recorded a further gain in the intensively competitive Western European combine market. Also, tractor market share gains in Denmark, Spain, and Japan were particularly noticeable, since Ford New Holland sales increased while overall industry sales declined.

Moglia said indicators suggest 1990 will be a successful year for the company. "In North America, farm debt continues to drop, land values are rising, and we're seeing more acres in production. Those factors, plus an aging inventory of used machinery in farmers' hands, lead us to believe that sales will continue to be good."

"We also have high expectations for the success of the new 8030 Series of over-100 horsepower tractors we introduced in recent days," Moglia said. "They're equipped with our new Ultra-Command powershift. We think it's the best powershift in the industry, and no doubt will be a positive influence on our sales for 1990 and beyond."

Other 1989 company highlights include: opening tractor and equipment credit offices in all North American branch locations; introduction of a new retirement and savings program for employees; and introduction of a profit-sharing program for North American employees.

TALLAHASSEE, FL (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - State Comptroller Gerald Lewis today took legal action to oust Bank of Credit and Commerce International (Overseas) Ltd. (BCCI), a Cayman Island Bank with an agency office in Miami, from Florida.

The institution pled guilty earlier this year to charges that it laundered drug money at a defunct Tampa, Fla. office of the bank.

"We have concluded that there is no place in Florida for an institution that acknowledges it engaged in laundering drug profits," Lewis said. "If we're serious about the war on drugs, the inescapable conclusion is that BCCI is no longer welcome."

Because BCCI is a foreign bank, it is required to file an application each year to renew its license to operate in Florida. Today's action is an order denying its renewal application on grounds that the bank's continued presence in Florida is not in the public interest in the wake of its recent guilty plea.

Its license expires March 14.

Under state law, the bank has 30 days to challenge Lewis' order, which gives the institution until early April to decide whether to comply with the comptroller's directive or request an appeal.

"We take no pleasure in taking this action but feel that it's entirely warranted by the circumstances of the case," Lewis said.

PHILADELPHIA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Consolidated Rail Corp. (NYSE: CRR) is investing nearly $8 million to improve and expand its intermodal terminal in Harrisburg, Pa.

The project currently is scheduled for completion in 1991.

Through the 1980s, the Harrisburg terminal has been one of the fastest-growing on the Conrail system for intermodal shipments, in which highway trailers and ocean shipping containers are transported on special railroad flatcars. From 1986 through 1989, the volume of trailers and containers handled at Harrisburg increased by more than 50 percent.

"Conrail's increasing volume of business at the Harrisburg Intermodal Terminal mirrors both the area's growing prominence as a distribution center and the attractiveness to shippers of our high- quality service," said Gordon H. Kuhn, Conrail's senior vice president- Marketing and Sales. "The Harrisburg project will enable Conrail to handle even more efficiently the increasing demand for intermodal service in the region."

Primary markets served by Conrail's six daily intermodal trains to and from Harrisburg include Chicago and East St. Louis, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; northern New Jersey; Columbus and Toledo, Ohio; and Allentown and Pittsburgh, Pa., in addition to other points on the Conrail system. Through cooperative arrangements with connecting carriers, intermodal shipments also are handled between Harrisburg and cities throughout the nation.

Work at the terminal, which began last November, includes expansion of rail car capacity from 68 to 87 by replacing three short loading/unloading tracks with two long tracks, increasing trailer parking capacity from 350 to 675, asphalt paving, increased illumination and a new drainage system.

DAYTON, OH (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Nord Resources Corporation (NYSE: NRD) announced today that Nord Kaolin Company, its wholly owned subsidiary in Georgia, will begin commercial production of a newly developed high technology line of proprietary products, called "NORPLEX"(TM), this month. The annual capacity of the plant will be 35,000 to 40,000 tons.

It is anticipated that the new production facility will be expanded in stages as required by market demand, with a goal of achieving production capacity in excess of 200,000 tons by 1993.

With the completion of this major expansion of Nord Kaolin's facilities and new product start-up, company officials indicated that these new high-margin specialty pigments will provide the paper industry with the means to increase the quality of its end-products and reduce cost, without sacrificing quality. This new technology is broad-based, flexible and provides new applications beyond traditional kaolin markets. Moreover, the Norplex(TM) pigments command prices many times that of conventional kaolin products. While Norplex (TM) can be produced in a variety of grades, the version of Norplex(TM) now being produced will be used in the production of and as a coating for paper used for magazines, catalogs, cereal boxes, beer cartons, etc.

Company officials stated that, "We believe Nord's new Norplex(TM) pigments provide the first real step for papermakers to broaden pigment formulation alternatives beyond conventional methods. By developing this technology, Nord is making available to the paper industry an extremely flexible pigmentation system."

(NASDAQ: MOGN), today reported a net loss of $173,452 or 3 cents per common share for the three months ended Dec. 31, 1989, compared with a net loss of $698,455 or 9 cents per common share on continuing operations and a net loss of $396,633 or 5 cents per common share on discontinued operations for the corresponding 1988 period. The 1988 fourth-quarter results include a one-time $555,000 charge against continuing operations to fully provide for possible loss relating to a note receivable from the Molecular Genetics Research and Development Limited Partnership.

For the year ended Dec. 31, 1989, the company reported net income of $952,352 or 9 cents per common share (includes a 3-cent reduction for unpaid redeemable cumulative preferred stock dividends) on continuing operations and net income of $1,245,028 or 15 cents per share (including a one-time gain on the sale of the company's plant research subsidiary of $1,572,053) on discontinued operations compared with a net loss of $1,585,261 or 23 cents per common share on continuing operations and a net loss of $1,604,216 or 20 cents per common share on discontinued operations for the corresponding 1988 period.

Revenues for 1989 include a $760,550 gain on the company's January 1989 sale of capital stock in its Dutch research affiliate, MOGEN International N.V., reducing the company's ownership position from 11 percent to 4 percent.

In January 1990, the company announced it had commenced commercial pharmaceutical operations under its newly formed MGI PHARMA division via the acquisition of DIDRONEL(R) I.V., (etidronate disodium intravenious infusion) from Norwich Eaton Pharmaceuticals, Inc., of Norwich, N.Y. DIDRONEL I.V. was introduced into the market in May 1987 as an orphan drug and is a treatment for hypercalcemia in cancer patients. In addition to acquiring exclusive U.S. rights to DIDRONEL I.V., the company also entered into a co-marketing agreement for the promotion to oncologists, of oral DIDRONEL(R), currently manufactured, marketed and sold by Norwich Eaton. Additionally, it received rights to all Norwich Eaton etidronate disodium know-how relevant to oncology.

Dr. Kenneth F. Tempero, chairman and chief executive officer of Molecular Genetics, said, "We are very pleased with the progress we made in 1989 toward our goal of becoming a successful pharmaceutical company. The acquisition of DIDRONEL I.V. was a significant strategic step and gives us the ability to invest product revenues into adding a highly trained national specialty sales force and building our product marketing and promotion skills. During 1989, the company entered human clinical trials on MGI 647, MGI 136, and MGI 222, all of which we anticipate will address critical needs within oncology and produce significant revenues for MGI PHARMA. Our professional staff has expanded and will continue to expand as revenues grow and compounds in clinical development approach critical milestones. We continue to believe we have the strategy and resources, both human and financial, to make the company a successful pharmaceutical business."

Molecular Genetics, operating through its MGI PHARMA division, acquires, develops and markets pharmaceuticals targeted to oncologists and other specialist physicians. The company has acquired a portfolio of compounds, several of which have significant therapeutic and commercial potential, has three compounds in human clinical trials, and currently manufactures and sells DIDRONEL I.V. for the treatment of hypercalcemia in cancer patients. Company management has an established track record of identifying and developing commercially successful pharmaceuticals. Its shares trade on the NASDAQ national market system under the symbol MOGN.

MELVILLE, NY (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Arrow Electronics, Inc. (NYSE: ARW), today reported a return to per-share profitability in its fourth quarter, ended Dec. 31, 1989. Net income for the period was $1.7 million ($.03 per common share) on sales of $239.5 million. In 1988's fourth quarter, net income was $226,000 (for a loss of $.10 per common share after deducting preferred stock dividends) on sales of $242.3 million, and in 1989's third quarter the company incurred a net loss of $825,000 ($.18 per common share) on sales of $222.3 million.

Operating results for the fourth quarter of 1989 were well ahead of the results of both the year-earlier and immediately preceding quarters. Fourth quarter operating income of $7.5 million was 22 percent above operating income in 1988's fourth quarter and 32 percent above that of 1989's third quarter, reflecting lower operating expenses as a percentage of sales. The quarter also brought renewed strength in both sales and orders. The period's sales of $239.5 million were the highest quarterly sales of the year, while average daily orders advanced to over $4 million, the highest quarterly order rate since mid-1988.

For the full year ended Dec. 31, 1989, Arrow's income from continuing operations amounted to $3.2 million (for a loss of $.19 per common share after deducting preferred stock dividends) on sales of $925.2 million, compared with income from continuing operations of $9.7 million ($.38 per common share) on sales of $1.01 billion in 1988. Income from discontinued operations in 1988 was $13.5 million ($1.17 per common share), including a gain on the sale of such operations of $7.8 million ($.68 per common share).

"The year ended with strong evidence of an upturn following three quarters of lagging sales," said Stephen P. Kaufman, president and chief executive officer of Arrow. "The fourth quarter of 1989 brought a strengthening of demand for semiconductors, overcoming the softness experienced in the spring and summer months, and the market continues to gain strength in the current quarter. Thus far in 1990, Arrow's incoming order rate has advanced by 7 percent over the fourth quarter rate, thereby producing the strongest book-to-bill ratio in nearly two years," Kaufman noted, adding that he foresees further improvement in the company's performance as the year proceeds.

Early this year, Arrow launched a specialized distribution company, Capstone Electronics Corp., which exclusively distributes Arrow's passive, electromechanical and connector product lines. Kaufman said that both customers and suppliers have responded enthusiastically to Capstone's focused product marketing strategy. "We are pleased with the market's immediate response to Arrow's newest business initiative, the sales of which are now running at an annualized rate of approximately $100 million " Kaufman said.

Arrow Electronics is one of the world's two largest distributors of electronic components, systems and related products.

On a worldwide basis for 1989, Texaco added volumes to its reserve base equal to 105 percent of its combined oil and gas production, including equity reserves but excluding purchases and sales. In the U.S., reserve additions replaced 85 percent of the combined oil and gas production.

MEDIA, PA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Core pre-tax earnings at Elmwood Federal Savings Bank (NASDAQ-NMS: EFSB) increased for 1989 to $1.4 million from $1.2 million in 1988 while management substantially increased its loan loss provision.

At Dec. 31, the bank reported net interest income, before provision for loan losses, in excess of $7,777,000, a 9.86 percent increase over the $7,076,500 reported for 1988.

Based on the bank's continued strong capital position, the board of directors declared a dividend to be paid on March 30, 1990, to shareholders of record as of March 9. This will be the third semi-annual dividend of $.08 per share of common stock paid by the bank.

Deposits increased by more than $12.9 million, or 6.9 percent in 1989. Net income for the year was $929,030 or $.65 per share of common stock, compared with $1,367,156 or $.94 per share of common stock for 1988. This decrease is partially due to the substantial provision of $465,000 allocated in reserves for possible future loan losses. Lewis W. Walters, president and chief executive officer of Elmwood Federal, remarked that this allocation was made principally in light of industry practices as well as general economic conditions. He explained that this reserve will serve to insulate and protect the bank's future earnings.

The bank said it further strengthened its capital position by reducing the amount of advances from the Federal Home Loan Bank and other borrowings by more than 38 percent, decreasing the amount of borrowings from $42 million to $25 million.

Walters commented that a number of factors affected the bank's 1989 net income. Among these were the decline of $10 million in loan balances due to the regionally soft real estate market, and the increased cost of funds due to current market conditions. The soft real estate market also affected the level of income recognized from subsidiary company residential construction activity. Income from that source decreased to $305,000 in 1989 from $762,000 in 1988. In addition, 1989 net income figures did not include any material gains from security transactions while 1988 income figures reflected a gain of $439,000 from securities sales.

The bank's other income increased by 40 percent from $408,000 in 1988 to $686,282 in 1989.

In an effort to enhance shareholder value, Elmwood Federal has taken preliminary steps to affect a sale of the company to Susquehanna Bankshares Inc. (NASDAQ-NMS: SUSQ) of Lititz, Pa. The bank has signed a non-binding letter of intent pursuant to which Elmwood Federal would retain its current name and management and would become a wholly owned subsidiary of Susquehanna Bancshares Inc. The acquisition is subject to federal and state regulatory approval, as well as required shareholder approval.

Elmwood Federal's annual shareholder meeting will be held on Monday, April 30, at 9:30 a.m., at the Ramada Inn, on Industrial Highway in Essington, Pa.

Elmwood Federal Savings Bank's common stock is listed by the NASDAQ National Market System under the symbol EFSB. Susquehanna Bancshares Inc.'s common stock is listed by NASDAQ National Market System under the symbol SUSQ.

DALLAS (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - On Feb. 28, Southwest Airlines (NYSE: LUV) became the first U.S. customer to take delivery of a state-of-the-art-Boeing 737-500 aircraft, and the plane entered service today.

"Southwest Airlines is constantly striving to be on the leading edge of technological advancement," said Herbert D. Kelleher, chairman of the board, president and chief executive officer of the carrier. "The introduction of the Boeing 737-500 aircraft to our customers offers them the quietest and most fuel efficient aircraft of its size, while at the same time allowing Southwest to remain the low fare carrier with the ultimate in customer service. Perhaps more importantly, Southwest's is the youngest pure jet fleet in the U.S. aviation industry."

As the newest member of Southwest's fleet, the -500 is about the size of the -200 aircraft, but boasts all of the advanced technologies of the larger -300 and -400 models. The -500 will consume up to 20 percent less fuel per seat than a comparably configured -200 and will provide 122 seats when configured for Southwest Airlines.

The General Electric CFM56-3 series engine utilized in the new aircraft is noted for its exceptional fuel efficiency, low noise and high reliability. This advanced engine assures that Southwest Airlines and the 737-500 will be good community neighbors at noise-sensitive airports such as Love Field in Dallas. Takeoff, sideline and approach noise levels are better than the stringent "Stage 3" limits set by the U.S. government.

The interior of the 737-500 is designed for maximum comfort and efficiency; advanced technology is evident throughout the airframe. The flight deck will feature sophisticated avionics. Another feature is windshear detection capability.

The aircraft offers a number of structural changes introduced in the 737-300 and -400 models, including tip extensions to both the wings and horizontal stabilizers; lengthened and reshaped dorsal fairing at the root of the vertical tail; repositioned nose gear to help provide engine inlet ground clearance.

Southwest's pilots flying 737-200s and -300s are licensed to fly the 737-500, so the new aircraft will be simply and successfully integrated into Southwest Airlines' existing fleet of 46 737-200 and 48 737-300 aircraft.

The airline currently has 37 additional firm orders for the aircraft with options for 30 more. In addition to the -500 aircraft options and orders Southwest has eight firm orders and six options on -300 aircraft.

To illustrate, this year we've had differences in sales incentive timing, fleet deliveries delayed by assembly plant downtime and severe winter storms affecting a large part of the nation."

UPPER SADDLE RIVER, NJ (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Quick Collect(SM), a new money transfer service provided by Western Union Financial Services, Inc., delivers consumer payments of delinquent debts to creditors in 15 minutes. The low, flat rate transaction fee paid by the debtor is less than the cost of overnight express services. The first banks, credit unions and collection agencies using Quick Collect report a strong increase in collection volume.

The new service utilizes Western Union's network of more than 15,000 authorized agents, many offering a seven-day-a-week service with extended hours. Debtors make payments in cash, and the agent transmits the account information and payment amount to Western Union. This amount is transmitted via the Western Union money transfer system to the creditor, who gets a Western Union guaranteed check cut in his office using a dedicated Western Union check printer installed on-site. The check stub provides complete account information for record-keeping.

With each payment, the debtor pays a flat $8.50 transaction fee to Western Union. This is less than overnight delivery services, and lower than the cost of emergency cash transfers, which are generally based on the amount being sent.

Aside from the cost of the equipment and telephone line, there is no cost to the creditor for the Quick Collect service. The printer can be purchased or rented from Western Union. In some cases a creditor's current computer printer can be used, if compatible.

Western Union's Quick Collect was developed for banks, credit unions, insurance companies, check guarantee companies, mortgage and finance companies, collection agencies and other financial organizations, as well as retail creditors like department stores, hospitals and schools. It complements Western Union's commercial and consumer money transfer services, and can be used to extend credit limits on credit cards and pay overdue insurance premiums, as well as for mortgage and retail debt collection or to receive payment on bad checks.

Western Union Corporation (NYSE: WU) provides a broad range of messaging, financial and other services, both domestically and internationally, to meet specific needs of business customers and individual consumers. Its Financial Services subsidiary is the leading provider of money transfer, bill payment and other consumer financial services to a large and growing segment of the population.

BETHESDA, MD (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - The chairman and chief executive officer of Martin Marietta Corporation (NYSE: ML) said the company "is remarkably well situated to meet the challenges of the new decade and to continue to grow and prosper" despite increasing pressures for reduction in defense spending in the United States and NATO nations.

In the corporation's newly published 1989 annual report, Norman R. Augustine told shareowners, "This optimistic appraisal rests in large measure on the strong position steadily built over the past decade in critical markets."

That strong market position is confirmed and supported by a high degree of customer satisfaction reflected in an award fee realization rate of close to 90 percent, as well as the corporation's mastery of key technologies, according to the letter to shareowners, signed by Augustine and A. Thomas Young, president and chief operating officer.

"Of 22 technologies identified by the government as critical to the nation's interest, Martin Marietta has a leading position in 17, including micro-electronic circuitry, parallel processing, electro-optical imaging and robotics," the letter to shareowners added. "A deliberately chosen mix of programs in such essential technology areas underlies the corporation's current advantageous position.

"Martin Marietta does not manufacture ships, planes or tanks," the letter said. "Instead, it designs, manufactures and tests systems and products which enhance such platforms by improving their performance, increasing their operating hours and capability, or extending their usefulness -- systems that can stretch a shrinking defense dollar.

"Another strong plus," the letter noted, "is the corporation's record, high-quality backlog, representing more than two years of sales," one of the highest ratios of backlog to sales in the industry. "Notably, orders for the powerful Titan IV space launch vehicle and the external tank for the space shuttle account for a significant portion of the backlog. Both programs are essential to the nation's space activities and have wide support in the current budget environment."

The letter cited National Aeronautics and Space Administration space activities and Martin Marietta's significant business in information systems and materials, particularly construction aggregates, as future sources of growth for the corporation. State and federal spending to repair the infrastructure of roads, highways and bridges is projected to increase over the next six years by about 65 percent, or more than $60 billion. Martin Marietta is a leading producer of aggregates, operating more than 100 plants in the Midwest and Southeast.

"The corporation is proud of its contribution to a strong U.S. defense that has helped bring about world change, particularly a relaxation of East-West tensions," the letter said. "The real dividend is peace, and we are confident that the corporation is flexible enough to grasp opportunities that result from this very positive turn of events.

"Our goal is to solidify Martin Marietta's position as the premier quality producer in the industry and to keep the corporation growing. ... We believe we have the necessary ingredients to do just that," the letter concluded.

CALGARY, ALBERTA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Bow Valley Industries Ltd. (Toronto: BVI) is pleased to announce that the company has entered into an agreement in principle with Canadian Hunter and Esso Resources Canada Limited to jointly explore the two companies' land holdings in a large area of northeastern British Columbia. A formal agreement between the companies is expected to be signed by the end of March.

Bow Valley has committed to spend $20 million, and could conduct up to $30 million, of drilling over the next two years to earn up to a 20 percent working interest in over 680,000 gross acres. The drilling phase of the program has already begun following the initial geological and geophysical exploration which Esso and Canadian Hunter have jointly conducted over the past 18 months. Bow Valley will augment the existing Canadian Hunter/Esso exploration team with members of its own staff and the three companies will explore the area together, expanding on the work done to date by the existing rights holders.

The exploration lands have multi-zone potential for both oil and gas in Cretaceous, Triassic, Mississipian and Devonian rocks. The area is bounded by major hydrocarbon accumulations such as Monias (700 BCF), Parkland (235 BCF), Brassey (25 MMBO) and Inga (35 MMBO) and is just north of the giant Elmworth field (5.6 TCF). Bow Valley considers this to be a unique exploration opportunity, in the sense that the lands represent a large available contiguous land position with considerable reserves potential in an area that fits geographically and geologically with Bow Valley's long term strategy and objectives.

KIRKLAND, WA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - McCaw Cellular Communications, Inc. (NASDAQ: MCAWA) today announced the successful completion of its tender offer for 21.9 million shares of LIN Broadcasting Corporation (NASDAQ: LINB) and its acceptance for payment of those shares at $154.11 per share. Added to the shares of LIN that McCaw Cellular already owns, the shares purchased in the tender give McCaw ownership of a 51.9 percent interest in LIN on a fully diluted basis.

In regard to the announcement, Craig O. McCaw, chairman and CEO of McCaw Cellular, said, "The consummation of our tender for LIN shares is a significant step for McCaw Cellular and an important development for the cellular industry. WEST CHESTER, PA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Today, West Chester-based Cephalon Inc. announced a newly discovered enzyme that is thought to play a major role in neuritic plaque formation that is characteristic of Alzheimer's disease.

Many scientists believe that these beta-amyloid containing plaques are associated with the Alzheimer's pattern of neuronal brain cell degeneration. The plaques consist largely of a 43 amino acid peptide called beta-amyloid which is created by an abnormal enzyme activity. The new protease enzyme has been named with the descriptive acronym CLIPSIN for its Chymotripsin-Like Protease activity.

"Everyone has been looking for this elusive protease for some time," stated Cephalon President Dr. Frank Baldino Jr. He said, "The inhibitors of CLIPSIN, which we are synthesizing, will become the first candidate therapeutic drugs to actually stop the Alzheimer's disease neurodegeneration process."

The CLIPSIN discovery was made by Dr. Robert G. Siman, senior scientist and head of Cephalon's biochemistry group, in collaboration with Dr. Robert B. Nelson, currently at Harvard Medical School. This research is reported in the March 5 issue of the "Journal of Biological Chemistry."

Alzheimer's disease is the most common cause of dementia in older Americans, affecting about 4 million people in the United States today. Early memory lapses gradually lead to more serious problems including the inability to speak and care for oneself. The cost of caring for Alzheimer's patients is estimated at more than $40 billion annually in the United States.

Thornton, Pinick, Cruze and Welliver will continue reporting to Shrontz, with Givan scheduled to do so upon Haynes' retirement.

In announcing Stamper's retirement, Shrontz said, "Mal Stamper has made many significant contributions to The Boeing Company, including his leadership as company president from 1972 to 1985 and his management of the 747 program."

An engineering graduate of Georgia Tech, Stamper joined Boeing in 1962. He served as vice president-general manager of the 747 Division, and was senior vice president-operations for The Boeing Co. Stamper was elected president of Boeing and a member of the board of directors in 1972, and

FORT WORTH, TX (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - The board of directors of The Western Company of North America (NYSE: WSN) today adopted a Stockholder Protection Rights Plan and declared a dividend of one Right on each outstanding share of Western Common Stock. The dividend will be paid to stockholders of record on March 15, 1990. Rights will also attach to Common Stock issued any time prior to a triggering event.

The Rights Plan was not adopted in response to any specific effort to acquire control of the company. It was adopted to deter abusive takeover tactics that can be used to deprive stockholders of the full value of their investment.

Until it is announced that a person or group has acquired 15 percent or more of the company's Common Stock (through acquisition of Common Stock or securities convertible into Common Stock) or any person commences a tender offer that will result in such person or group owning 15 percent or more of the company's Common Stock, the Rights will will be evidenced by the Common Stock certificates, will automatically trade with the Common Stock and will not be exercisable.

Upon announcement that any person or group has acquired 15 percent or more of Western's Common Stock, each Right (other than Rights beneficially owned by such Acquiring Person or transferees thereof, which Rights become void) will entitle its holder to purchase, for the exercise price, a number of shares of Western Common Stock having a market value of twice the exercise price. Also, if after an Acquiring Person controls the company's board of directors, the company is involved in a merger or sells more than 50 percent of its assets or earning power (or has entered into an agreement to do any of the foregoing) and, in the case of a merger, the Acquiring Person will receive different treatment than all other stockholders, each Right will entitle its holder to purchase, for the exercise price, a number of shares of common stock of the Acquiring Person or other party to the transaction having a market value of twice the exercise price. If any person or group acquires between 15 percent and 50 percent of Western's Common Stock, the company's board of directors may at its option, exchange one share of Western Common Stock for each Right.

The Rights generally may be terminated by the board of directors prior to the time any person becomes an Acquiring Person.

Sheldon R. Erikson, chairman and chief executive officer of Western, stated that, "The Rights Plan is not intended to and will not prevent a takeover of the company at a full and fair price. However, the Rights may cause substantial dilution to a person or group that acquires 15 percent or more of the Common Stock unless the Rights are first terminated by the board of directors of the company. Nevertheless, the Rights should not interfere with a transaction that is in the best interest of the company and its stockholders because the Rights can be terminated prior to a triggering event."

Erikson added, "The Rights Plan does not in any way weaken the company's financial strength nor interfere with its business plans. The issuance of the Rights has no dilutive effect, will not affect reported earnings per share, is not taxable to Western or its stockholders and will not change the way in which Western shares are traded."

A letter to stockhoders regarding the Rights Plan and a summary of certain terms of the Rights Plan will be mailed to stockholders.

The Western Company of North America provides pressure pumping services which include cementing, fracturing and acidizing, and offshore drilling internationally. Western's common stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange (symbol: WSN).

PRINCETON, N.J. (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Escalon Ophthalmics, Inc., Rocky Hill, N.J., has signed a worldwide licensing agreement for the SDRD sustained drug release device with Medical Marketing International Limited a Cambridge, U.K.-based technology transfer and licensing group working in close conjunction with its U.S. associate company, Medical Products Search of North Carolina.

The device, invented by Professor Sohrab Darougar of the London- based Institute of Ophthalmology, is the result of several years study into the problems associated with applying medicines in the eye. The invention uses a completely different technique to enable a wide range of medicines to be released in the eye, potentially for periods of up to one month.

Because of the worldwide demand for such a technology, David Best of MMI, reported that more than 30 companies were prepared to negotiate for the rights, but Escalon was chosen because its mission was identical to the needs of this project.

Escalon Ophthalmics, Inc. was founded by a prominent group of ophthalmologists and ophthalmic research experts. Escalon's mission is to research, develop and market ophthalmic pharmaceutical and medical device products. It will initially enter the ophthalmic field with in- licensed, FDA-approved, proprietary products used primarily in the surgical setting. The revenues generated from these products will fund one of Escalon's long-term objectives, which is to enhance delivery of drugs to the eye by sustaining release and improving compliance.

The SDRD licensed from Darougar through MMI/MPS is compatible with Escalon's long-term objectives. It will complement Escalon's existing effort in developing and marketing topical and injectable ophthalmic pharmaceuticals and devices.

TORRANCE, CA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Sales of the Lexus LS 400 and ES 250 continued strong in February, topping the sales pace set in January.

Lexus, the luxury division of Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., sold 2,783 LS 400s and 1,388 ES 250s. Lexus models went on sale Sept. 1, 1989, and as a result there are no comparable 1989 totals. Since introduction Lexus has sold 24,608 vehicles.

"While many in the luxury import class were down from January, both the LS 400 and ES 250 actually topped last month's daily selling rate," said Dave Illingworth, Lexus vice president and general manager. "The ES 250 had its second best month yet and the LS 400 was slowed only by availability."

For the second time since introduction, Lexus division sales topped those of BMW. Individually, ES 250 sales topped the Mercedes Benz 190, BMW 4-door 300 series, Audi 80/90 and Infiniti M30. The LS 400 continued to lead luxury class rivals including the Mercedes Benz 300-series, Mercedes Benz S-class, BMW 5- and 7-series combined, Audi 100/200, Jaguar and the Infiniti Q45.

The LS 400 is a 4-door luxury sedan powered by a 250-horsepower, 32-valve, 4-cam aluminum V8 engine. The ES 250 is a 4-door executive sedan powered by a V6 engine.

TRENTON, N.J. (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Myles Kranzler, president and chairman of Base Ten Systems, Inc. (NASDAQ: BASEA) announced today that "1990 began with the most successful first quarter in Base Ten's history. Revenues reached $12.4 million compared with $7.2 million in the first quarter of 1989, ended Jan. 31, 1990.

Net earnings were $557,000 or $.16 per share compared with $86,000 or $.02 per share in the same period last year. Pre-tax operating earnings improved to $928,000 compared with a loss of $167,000 in the first three months of 1989. These results reflect the benefits of the production run of weapons control products for the Tornado aircraft begun in 1988 and scheduled to continue into 1991."

Kranzler further stated "concerns over the highly publicized demise of the defense budget are premature. While some programs are being curtailed, many more remain in place and, in particular, those related to our skills in electronics should be active for some time to come. We expect to do substantial new business in this field in Western Europe, in the Far East, and most importantly, right here at home."

Looking to the future Kranzler said, "Base Ten is exploring the new and exciting field of Electronic Data Interchange. The next decade promises rapid growth of Electronic Data Interchange as we advance into the paperless society and there will be a need to keep this data private. Information relating to movement of funds between banks, sale of securities, personal medical and credit data, purchase contracts and numerous other every day activities will now be transferred using computers and telephone lines. These systems will be as ordinary as the fax machine is today, and companies that don't have them will be at a disadvantage."

GREENSBORO, NC (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Vanguard Cellular Sytems, Inc. (NASDAQ: VCELA) announced that for the third consecutive year the Company has more than doubled its subscribers and revenues. Total revenues for the year ended December 31, 1989 increased 104 percent to $46,613,000 from $22,861,000 for 1988. The majority of the increase was attributable to a 127 percent jump in cellular service revenues to $35,080,000 from $15,447,000. The improvement in cellular service revenues was driven by an increase of 21,000 in the number of subscribers in the Company's Pennsylvania "Supersystem" and in its New England, Florida, New York, and West Virginia operations.

Vanguard President Haynes G. Griffin said, "The operating results for 1989 reflect the company's ongoing exponential subscriber growth and the expansion of our infrastructure to support that growth. The year-end subscriber count for our control markets, which are markets we control or for which we have a contract to acquire a controlling interest, increased 107 percent in 1989 to 40,600 from 19,600 a year ago. Subscriber levels grew by a record 6,500 customers in the fourth quarter alone. This was 63 percent greater than the number of subscribers added in the fourth quarter of last year and 20 percent higher than the number of subscribers added in the third quarter of this year."

Overall, the Company's net loss for 1989 totalled $6,407,000 or $.31 per share compared to a net loss of $26,618,000 or $1.37 per share in 1988. During the fourth quarter, the Company completed the asset exchange for 100 percent of the Portsmouth-Dover, New Hampshire/Maine MSA in exchange for 100 percent of the Company's assets in the Macon, Georgia MSA. Based on its investment in this asset, the Company recognized a one-time gain on the exchange of its Macon interest of $38,120,000, or $1.86 per share.

The Company's operating profit before sales and marketing expenses (cellular service fees less cost of service and general and administrative expenses) improved to $1,077,000 from a loss of $7,429,000 in 1988. Marketing and selling expenses increased to $18,737,000 in 1989 from $10,374,000 in 1988 as a direct result of market expansion and subscriber growth. This was particularly true during the fourth quarter when the Company had a record number of customers sign contracts for service. Many of the sales took place in December, resulting in relatively small amounts of revenue for 1989, but higher commission and installation costs in the fourth quarter. General and administrative expenses increased to $19,764,000 from $15,149,000 in 1988, but decreased from 66 percent to 42 percent as a percentage of total revenues. Increases in 1989 were largely due to expansion of the Company's operations to accommodate the needs of its cellular markets and the build-out of the Company's management information systems, billing, credit & collections, and customer service infrastructure; all of which are designed to meet current and future subscriber growth demands.

Cost of service expenses were $14,239,000 and $7,727,000 during 1989 and 1988, respectively. Cost of service increased during 1989 as a result of increased subscriber levels, but decreased to 41 percent of cellular service revenues compared with 50 percent during 1988. Depreciation and amortization expenses increased to $12,011,000 in 1989 from $4,992,000 in 1988 as new systems were brought into commercial service and construction programs begun in 1988 were completed. Interest expense increased $8,402,000 during 1989 to $15,696,000 as the Company made additional borrowings totalling $60,344,000 from its revolving line of credit to finance capital expenditures, acquisitions and working capital requirements.

Chairman Stuart S. Richardson summarized the results for the year as follows: "We are extremely proud of and encouraged by the Company's accomplishments in 1989. Most encouraging is that we have been able to attract the management talent at all levels necessary to control and support our rapid expansion. This, together with our substantial investment in infrastructure, makes us confident that we are prepared for the remarkable growth we believe the 1990's will bring."

Vanguard Cellular Systems, Inc., is headquartered in Greensboro, North Carolina, and is the fifth largest non-wireline cellular company with over 5.2 million pops. The Company directly and indirectly owns interests in and operates cellular telephone systems located primarily in the eastern United States.

NAPERVILLE, IL (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Varlen Corp. (NASDAQ: VRLN) had record earnings and sales for its 1989 fiscal year, during which it completed three strategic acquisitions, sold three businesses, and announced plans to divest other operations that were under-performing or in markets without sufficient growth potential, it was announced today.

Richard L. Wellek, president and chief executive officer, said, "We achieved substantial gains while taking action designed to contribute to our long-term growth, and strengthened our position in segments of the transportation and laboratory equipment markets."

Commenting on the future, Wellek said, "Although we do not anticipate out-performing last year's first half, we feel we are well positioned to have another record year."

For the 1989 fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1990, earnings from continuing operations increased 36 percent to $9,987,000, or $2.23 a share, from $7,354,000, or $1.71 a share, last year.

Net income, which includes results from discontinued operations, increased to $10,275,000, or $2.29 a share, compared to $9,748,000, or $2.27 a share in the prior fiscal year.

Sales from continuing operations for the 1989 fiscal year were $226,741,000, a 55 percent increase from year-ago sales of $146,752,000, reflecting the company's acquisition during the year of Consolidated Metco and two product lines -- plus internal growth.

For the 1989 fiscal fourth quarter ended Jan. 31, 1990, net earnings (all from continuing operations) were $1,750,000, or 39 cents per share, compared to earnings from continuing operations of $1,518,000, or 35 cents per share, in the year-ago period. Net earnings in the year-ago period were $1,978,000, or 46 cents per share, including earnings from operations discontinued in 1989 of $460,000, or 11 cents per share.

Sales for the 1990 fiscal fourth quarter were $53,517,000 compared with 1989 fiscal fourth quarter sales of $39,858,000, restated to exclude discontinued operations.

Wellek said the Cashiers Plastic division of its Consolidated Metco subsidiary, previously treated as discontinued, is now being treated as a continuing operation.

He noted that because of a weak acquisition climate, current plans called for retention of the business under a program of careful expansion and profit improvement.

Varlen sales and earnings for the first three quarters of the 1989 fiscal year have been restated to reflect retention of the operating unit increasing earnings from continuing operations by $258,000, or 6 cents per share, on sales of $8,755,000, and decreasing discontinued results correspondingly.

Wellek noted that the favorable 1989 fiscal year results were primarily due to record sales and earnings at Varlen's Keystone Railway Equipment Co., the acquisition of Consolidated Metco, and a major improvement in earnings at its National Metalwares, Inc. unit.

He noted that acquisitions made during the year gave Varlen an entry into new transportation markets, adding considerable potential for growth.

"Consolidated Metco, acquired in March 1989, is a leading supplier of precision parts and components used by truck and trailer manufacturers," he said.

"The draft gear product line acquired in July 1989 has broadened the product offerings of our Keystone Railway Equipment subsidiary.

"The assets we acquired in the fourth quarter from a competitor of our Means Industries subsidiary will increase our sales of after market clutch plates."

"In addition to our investments in these new businesses, we have maintained ongoing capital expenditure programs in our operating companies to fund product development, improve quality and lower costs," Wellek said.

He noted the company's positive cash flow as well as the proceeds from several divestitures allowed Varlen to conduct its acquisition program without materially increasing its long term debt to equity ratio.

Wellek said that the markets served by Varlen are weaker than they were last year, but he believes the company is well positioned for continued growth.

"Our new acquisitions and new product programs will generate increased revenues for us. We are pursuing other acquisitions and joint ventures that will allow some of our operating companies to become global participants in their niche markets. We are taking measures to lower costs and increase market share. We expect to continue outperforming our markets while investing for the long-term health of the company."

Varlen is a diversified manufacturer of precision industrial products for segments of the transportation and laboratory equipment industries as well as selected consumer product markets. Varlen has operating locations in six states. Headquarters are in Naperville.

LAWRENCEVILLE, NJ (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - First Fidelity Bancorporation (NYSE: FFB) today announced a productivity plan that is expected to reduce spending in 1990 by a gross amount of approximately $95 million from the annualized 1989 fourth quarter rate of core operating expenses of about $946 million.

Actual fourth quarter 1989 operating expenses were $252 million and management's estimate of core operating expenses for the quarter was $236.5 million.

The productivity plan includes a reduction in force of approximately 1,400 positions. This staff reduction and a more modest reduction undertaken in late 1989 will reduce employment levels from about 13,900 in October 1989 to about 12,100. Employees whose positions are being eliminated are being notified this week.

This reduction will result in savings of approximately $50 million in 1990. The second component of the productivity plan calls for reductions of approximately $45 million in other operating expenses. The gross savings will be partially offset by an estimated $23 million cost of transition benefits for displaced employees. This cost will be recognized in the first quarter. On an annualized basis, the total gross reductions should approximate $115 million.

Employees affected are being provided comprehensive transition packages, including salary, benefits and assistance in finding new employment.

The bank also said that a task force, under Donald C. Parcells, senior vice president, had begun work on planning and implementing the consolidation of transaction processing operations.

On Feb. 1, Terracciano assumed the positions of chairman, president and chief executive officer at First Fidelity. On his first day, he announced the appointments of Peter C. Palmieri as vice chairman and chief credit officer; Michael L. LaRusso as senior vice president and director of audit and policy development, and Parcells as senior vice president and director of the project to consolidate operations and systems. He also announced the establishment of an Office of the Chairman. In meetings with the press on Feb. 6, Terracciano said that he had initiated a two-phase productivity study of First Fidelity.

First Fidelity Bancorporation is the parent company of the First Fidelity banks and Morris Savings Bank of New Jersey and Fidelity Bank and the Merchants banks of Pennsylvania. With $30.7 billion in assets and more than 500 offices, First Fidelity is one of the 25 largest banking companies in the United States.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Citicorp (NYSE: CCI) announced today that, as part of its previously announced decision to review certain of its non-strategic and appreciated assets in connection with the strengthening of its capital base, it is exploring alternatives to maximize the value of its AMBAC Indemnity Corporation subsidiary, including a possible sale.

AMBAC, wholly owned by Citibank, N.A., is a Wisconsin domiciled insurance company, headquartered in New York City. It is one of the largest and most profitable monoline insurance companies providing credit enhancement on municipal bonds and certain other tax-exempt securities.

Citicorp stated that AMBAC has experienced significant growth in recent years in terms of earnings, capital and market share. Today, AMBAC has a leading market position and will not be sold unless an attractive proposal is made by a high-quality, well-capitalized institution with a long-term perspective on its investment in AMBAC.

During the period of Citicorp's review, AMBAC will continue to be an active and innovative participant in all areas of its business and Citicorp will continue its strong commitment to the business.

As a leading competitor in its industry, AMBAC Indemnity Corporation had a market share of approximately 33 percent at year-end 1989. AMBAC's capital totals approximately $700 million. On the basis of this stand-alone capital, its conservative underwriting policies and its proven claims paying ability, AMBAC is rated "Aaa/AAA" by the major rating agencies.

Citicorp has retained Citibank Mergers and Acquisitions and Salomon Brothers Inc. to assist in its review.

This decision carries no further implications for Citicorp's other very successful commercial and personal lines insurance businesses around the world.

CAMBRIDGE, MA (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - T Cell Sciences, Inc., (NASDAQ/NMS: TCEL) reported today that sales of the company's T cell- based scientific products exceeded $2.3 million for the nine months ended Jan. 31, 1990, a 33 percent increase from the $1.7 million level for the same period in the prior year. Product sales for the quarter ended Jan. 31 amounted to nearly $800,000, up more than 30 percent versus the third quarter last year. The net loss for the first nine months was in line with expectations, amounting to $1.3 million ($.16 per share), compared to a loss of $1.2 million ($.14 per share) in the previous year. The company reported essentially breakeven results for the third fiscal quarter, compared to a loss of $495,000 ($.06 per share) for the same period in fiscal 1989.

Total revenues of $8.1 million for the nine months ended Jan. 31, 1990 included $5.2 million of product development revenues, a 48 percent increase above the revenues reported for the first nine months last year. The significant increase in product development revenues resulted primarily from funding provided by SmithKline Beecham p.l.c. related to T Cell Sciences' complement blocker therapeutic product development agreement.

Total revenues of $3.6 million for the three months ended Jan. 31, 1990 included product development revenues approaching $2.7 million, a new quarterly record. SmithKline Beecham revenues (including several initial, one-time payments) essentially offset increased operating expenses, especially product development costs, yielding the breakeven results for the quarter.

The ongoing support from SmithKline for the preclinical development program on the complement blocker will contribute to the company's financial results for the fourth quarter of fiscal 1990 and into fiscal 1991.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - The Hallwood Group Incorporated (NYSE: HWG) lost $655,000, or 11 cents per share, in the quarter ended Jan. 31. This compares with a loss of $286,000, or 6 cents per share, in the comparable quarter a year ago.

Financial Services Operations contributed $706,000 to the quarterly results; and Textile Products Operations (Brookwood subsidiary) made $377,000; but Real Estate Operations lost $81,000. Accrued interest on Hallwood's 13.5 percent subordinated debentures, distributed to shareholders in May, impacted performance by $1.6 million in the quarter.

Affiliated companies (Hallwood Energy, ShowBiz and Integra) contributed $309,000 to Hallwood's second-quarter income, compared to a loss of $137,000 last year. In addition to its holding of 396,000 shares, or 8.7 percent, of ShowBiz, Hallwood has 808,000 warrants to purchase ShowBiz shares at $4 per share. Under the equity method of accounting by which Hallwood computes income from affiliates, the warrants are not considered as shares and thus are not included in the computation of income from ShowBiz. Nevertheless, they represent an unrealized gain of more than $8.5 million at the current market price of ShowBiz shares.

Revenue for the quarter was $19.9 million, including $17.7 million from Brookwood, vs. $3.5 million a year ago before acquisition of the textile subsidiary.

For the first six months, Hallwood lost $1.0 million, or 18 cents per share, compared to net income of $998,000, or 22 cents per share, last year, when the sale of Hallwood Plaza shopping center produced a gain of $900,000.

Revenue for the first half was $38.2 million, including $34.3 million from Brookwood, vs. $5.9 million last year.

FORT LAUDERDALE, FL (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Responding immediately and aggressively to the Hertz Corp.'s latest marketing ploy, the removal of mileage caps on advance reservations for non-contract rental cars, Alamo Rent A Car issued a statement today asserting that Alamo "continues to be the only major rental car company in the world to offer all customers -- leisure and business travelers alike -- unconditional and wholly unrestricted, unlimited free mileage at every location with every rental."

The Fort Lauderdale-based company interpreted the Hertz move as a calculated attempt to attract more vacation travelers in the hopes of halting its accelerating loss of market share. According to just-released 1989 market share reports from Florida's leading airports, Hertz continues to lose business in 14 out of 15 of the leading rental markets in the state, the nation's No. 1 vacation destination.

In 1975, Alamo Rent A Car became the first rental car company to offer unlimited, unconditional free mileage in Florida. Since then, consumer-driven policies such as free mileage and low-cost rentals have propelled Alamo's growth, helping to make it the nation's fifth largest auto rental firm. The company, which serves more than 5 million customers annually, now has 86 locations in 34 states, representing more than 92 percent of the country's top rental markets.

In 1984, Alamo became the first and today remains the only car rental firm to offer free unlimited mileage to every corporate renter regardless of negotiated price.

According to an independent survey conducted in 1989, eight out of 10 people who rented from Alamo listed "the money saved due to Alamo's unlimited mileage policy" as an important factor in their level of overall satisfaction with the company.

Alamo Vice President of Market Planning Robert M. Coffey warned: "A glance at the headlines may deceive readers into thinking the Hertz program is similar to ours. Nothing could be further from the truth.

"Hertz's so-called 'unlimited' mileage offer to leisure travelers is illusory -- and very limited," he explained. "It applies only to advance reservations, company-owned locations and non-contract renters. Hertz has made unlimited mileage a negotiated 'perk' that it awards only to those contracted accounts that are big enough to warrant the benefit. So, new policy or not, most Hertz customers can still pay as much as 33 cents per mile."

The new Seagull notes were issued to former holders of trust units who chose to receive them as part of a payment option available to holders of at least 100 units. Those who selected the $1 per unit in principal amount of notes also received $1.45 per unit in cash. All other unitholders received $2.05 per unit in cash.

The notes will remain outstanding until a final, nonappealable decision is rendered in a long-standing tax dispute between Seagull's Houston Oil & Minerals Operation (HO&M) subsidiary and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). If HO&M ultimately prevails, the unitholders will receive the principal amount plus interest that will have accrued since Jan. 1, 1990. GREENWICH, CT (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Finevest Foods, Inc. (NYSE: FVF) today reported a net loss of $18,970,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1989, which includes a third quarter pretax provision of $10,675,000 for restructuring its dairy operations and reflects minimal tax benefits for the year. On a per-share basis, the net loss of $1.79 per share reflects 78 cents from operations and $1.01 from the restructuring provision. The company's 1989 results compare to net income of $3.4 million, or 36 cents per share, for the year ended Dec. 31, 1988.

The loss resulted principally from low margins in the company's dairy operations, as extraordinary raw milk and related cost increases could not be fully passed along to customers due to competitive market conditions. The company expects its dairy operations to substantially improve in 1990 as a result of the restructuring program and the recently announced 18 percent drop in the "Minnesota-Wisconsin" industry base price of raw milk for spring deliveries, with further decreases expected.

The 1989 results of the company's frozen food distribution operation continued to meet expectations, but were not sufficient to offset the dairy losses. The company expects its frozen food distribution business will continue to grow, and increase its profitable contribution as a result of sales expansion and improved operations.

Net sales for the year ended Dec. 31, 1989, increased 10.4 percent to $700,760,000 from $634,633,000 in the 1988 period, as dairy sales increased 12.1 percent and frozen food distribution sales increased 8.1 percent. The increase in dairy sales resulted primarily from acquisitions of milk processing facilities in mid-1988 and early 1989. The increase in frozen food distribution sales was principally due to higher volume from new and existing customers, which was partially offset by business lost when several customers were acquired by supermarket chains with in-house frozen food facilities.

For the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1989, the company reported a net loss of $9,097,000, or 86 cents per share, which includes an operating loss of $4,870,000, or 46 cents per share, and the reversal of a tax benefit previously recorded in the third quarter of $4,227,000, or 40 cents per share. The company did not recognize any tax benefits in the quarter, which will be available to offset future taxable income. The 1989 quarterly loss compares with a net loss of $1,406,000, or 13 cents per share, in the same period last year. The operating loss for the fourth quarter of 1989 resulted from low margins in the company's dairy operations, caused by continued raw milk and related cost increases and competitive market conditions.

Net sales in the quarter increased 8.6 percent to $175,744,000 from $161,860,000 in the 1988 period. Dairy sales increased 8.1 percent, as a result of the acquisition of a milk processing facility in early 1989. Frozen food distribution sales increased 9.3 percent principally due to higher volume from new and existing customers.

Finevest Foods, Inc. is a leading wholesale distributor of frozen foods and dairy products in the southeastern United States and is one of that region's largest processors of fluid milk, ice cream and other related dairy products.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) PR NEWSWIRE - Angeles Corp. (AMEX: ANG) announced that its offer to purchase the assets of certain affiliated companies was accepted Mar. 2 by the investors in those entities, and the $36.6 million transaction has been completed.

Angeles had offered to purchase the assets, consisting primarily of mortgages and direct interests in real properties, of five of its public investment vehicles and a group of small private partnerhships.

Terms of the transactions provided that Angeles purchase the assets with up to 1,726,000 newly issued Angeles Corp. Units. Following the completion of the transaction, the "selling entities" are being liquidated and their Angeles Corp. Units will be distributed to their investors. Each Angeles Corp. Unit consists of one half share of common stock, one fiftieth of a new 12-1/2 percent subordinated debenture maturing in 2005, and a special cash payment of $1 over the four-year life of the Units. The cash payment is in addition to the interest paid on the debenture component of the Unit.

Angeles Corp. Units have been approved for listing on the American Stock Exchange (AMEX), and the Units are expected to begin trading on a when-issued basis (AMEX: ANG.E.WI) Mar. 6, pending distribution of the Unit certificates. At the end of four years, the Units will separate into their component parts, and the common stock and the debentures will trade separately.

The newest and largest of the selling entities, Angeles Finance Trust, is a mortgage REIT whose shareholders approved the offer at a reconvened special meeting Mar. 2. The Angeles Finance board of trustees had voted unanimously in April 1989 that the Trust, a real estate lender, be included in the offer. Its assets consisted solely of a portfolio of loans made to Angeles affiliates and guaranteed as to both principal and interest by Angeles Corp.

The transactions add to the capitalization and broadens the shareholder base of Angeles Corporation, a diversified investment management firm whose subsidiaries manage in excess of $4 billion of securities, real estate, mutual funds and leased equipment assets for more than 130,000 corporate, institutional and individual investors.

PRINCETON TOWNSHIP, NJ (MARCH 5) UPI - It's not every day that someone walks down the street carrying a missile under his arm - especially one swaddled in a white blanket. So maybe the panicked response by police was understandable.

But John Watson, 27, questioned why authorities kept him locked up for an hour Sunday and warned townsfolk to run for their lives when all he was carrying through Princeton Township was a rusty World War II-vintage dud.

Watson said he found the inert bazooka shell with a friend on a recent antique bottle-hunting trip to Louisville, Ky.

''We had permission to go through an attic in a home (outside) of Louisville and we found this practice round,'' Watson said. ''I didn't think there was any danger. In fact, I would like it back if it isn't dangerous at all.

Once back in New Jersey however, a friend advised Watson to turn the corroded shell over to police because it could be lethal, he said.

Carrying the projectile wrapped in a white blanket and tucked under his arm, Watson was walking through the community, about 10 miles north of Trenton, when he flagged down Patrolman Ernest Silagyi.

Silagyi placed the shell by the side of the road, locked Watson in his patrol car and authorities called in a bomb unit from Fort Dix, said John Buszko, a township patrolman.

Police also told residents initially either to evacuate the town or take shelter in their basements until the object was identified.

Watson said he was miffed about being kept locked up for almost an hour until police realized it was harmless.

''I was somewhat annoyed and it forced me to miss church,'' he said.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) UPI - The McMartin Pre-School molestation case, once the largest child sex-abuse case in U.S. history, is only a shadow of its former massive self as its only remaining defendant goes back on trial this week.

When initially filed in 1984, the sensational case involved hundreds of molestation charges against seven former teachers at the Virginia McMartin Pre-School in the affluent coastal community of Manhattan Beach.

Five of those defendants and scores of charges were dismissed in 1985 and 1986 because of insufficient evidence.

The two remaining defendants, former teachers Raymond Buckey and his mother, Peggy McMartin Buckey, went on trial in 1987. On Jan. 18 they were acquitted of 52 molestation counts.

The verdicts climaxed a nearly three-year, $13 million courtroom marathon that was the longest, costliest criminal trial in U.S. history.

Jurors deadlocked on one count of conspiracy and 12 other molestation counts against Raymond Buckey, who has steadfastly proclaimed his innocence.

After two weeks of public outcry over the acquittals, District Attorney Ira Reiner, a candidate for California attorney general, announced that he would retry Buckey on those charges.

Buckey, however, may face even fewer charges than that when jury selection begins Friday.

Last week, prosecutors announced that in an effort to strengthen their case and shorten the retrial, they were dropping the conspiracy count.

Also, Reiner last month said Buckey may be retried on as few as five molestation counts since only two of the remaining five alleged victims had made commitments to testify at the retrial.

Buckey's lawyer, Danny Davis, went even further. He said last week that his understanding was that none of the children was willing to testify. ''My information remains the same: No child witnesses are available,'' he said.

Prosecutors insisted that Davis's information were wrong. They said they had tentative agreements from all five children to testify.

''It's not uncommon for attorneys to talk and not know what they speak of '' Deputy District Attorney Joseph Martinez said. ''Certainly there will be child witnesses.''

Exactly how many children will testify and how many counts Buckey will be retried on will be revealed Tuesday when prosecutors refile the charges against him.

The retrial will differ significantly from the first trial in several key regards.

For one thing, only Buckey - and not his mother - will be tried, and he will be tried on far fewer counts.

For another, there is a new prosecution team. Reiner selected Martinez and Deputy District Attorney Pam Ferrero to replace the first trial's prosecutors, Lael Rubin and Roger Gunson, who asked to be taken off the case following the acquittals.

In yet another change, a new jurist, Superior Court Judge Stanley Weisberg will preside over the retrial. Judge William Pounders, who presided over the first trial, was taken off the case after the acquittals because he faced a possible conflict of interest due to post-trial remarks he made on television talk shows.

Perhaps the most obvious difference between the first trial and the retrial will be its length. Martinez last week estimated that the retrial, which is greatly reduced in scope, will last no longer than nine months, a far cry from the 33 months for the first trial.

''We don't expect to have another epic,'' he said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - A majority of parents were not involved in any kind of school group last fall, with a lack of time and work commitments the biggest deterrents to participation, a poll showed Monday.

In issuing their goals for American education last week, the nation's governors stressed the importance of parental involvement, and the Bush administration has called the right of parents to choose their children's schools the cornerstone of its education policy.

But the poll commissioned by Newsweek Inc. showed that although parents believed their influence is critical to children's learning, many said they lacked the time for involvement in school activities.

''This survey confirms what we had feared, that many parents are doing only half their job when it comes to getting a good education for their children,'' said Ann Lynch, president of the National Parent Teacher Association.

In an essay accompanying the survey, which appears in an advertising section in the March 12 iaauw of Newsweek magazine, Ernest Boyer suggested that parents be given time off from work with pay each term to visit their children's schools.

The poll based on a national sample of adults in 538 households with children in school was commissioned by Newsweek for the National PTA and Chrysler's Dodge division. The telephone poll was conducted by ICR Survey Research Group and had a margin of error of plus or minus 4.5 percentage points.

The poll found that in the fall of 1989, 44 percent of parents took part in a back-to-school night, 46 percent attended a parent-organization meeting, 63 percent went to a class or school program and 71 percent attended a scheduled parent-teach conference.

Fifty-seven percent of parents believed their role was ''extremely influential,'' but 53 percent said they are not involved in any parent groups at school. Of those not participating, 73 percent said they did not have the time and 66 cited work commitments as a deterrent.

Parents tended to be more active at home. Sxity-nine percent said they discussed school topics with their child nearly every school day, 58 percent helped their child with homework two to three times a week, and 52 percent read to their child at least once a week.

''I was shocked when I hear how uninvolved many parents seem to be in their kids' schools,'' Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca said. ''If we can't get parents involved, I don't know how we'll every succeed.''

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - A majority of elementary schools begin drug education in kindergarten, and most also have programs to discuss AIDS and sex education, a random survey of principals showed.

The National Association of Elementary School Principals poll followed up a similar survey three years ago. Surveys were mailed to a nationwide sample and returned by 495 principals in 1987 and 556 in 1990. Most responding principals were from middle-class schools in rural areas, suburbs or small towns.

The survey, released Sunday, found that elementary schools were beginning drug education earlier. Sex education programs were increasing at a quicker rates than drug programs, but were generally introduced later, between fourth and sixth grade.

Drug education existed in 95 percent of the schools, compared with 88 percent in 1987. Fifty-eight percent of schools began drug education in kindergarten, 30 percent by third grade and 12 percent between fourth and sixth grade.

Only 37 percent of the principals said there was not a drug problem in elementary schools, compared with 54 percent just three years before.

Seventy-two percent of the schools had sex education, compared with 61 percent in 1987. Twenty-two percent of principals reported sex education in kindergarten, 17 percent by third grade and 51 percent after fourth grade.

Questions about AIDS were asked for the first time. Ninety-six percent of the principals agreed that AIDS education should be part of the elementary school curriculum, but only 63 percent said they had an AIDS awareness program.

Of the schools with AIDS programs, 23 percent begin them in kindergarten, 20 percent start them by third grade and 44 percent begin between fourth and sixth grade.

Only 2 percent of schools have had a student or employee with AIDS. Seventy-seven percent of the principals said they would accept a student or employee infected with the AIDS virus, if health authorities approved.

''Rarely have schools responded so quickly to help society solve its problems,'' said Samuel Sava, executive director of NAESP. ''But, we need some help. As schools devote more time and personnel to society's ills, society simply must increase its investment in schools.''

The NAESP, founded in 1921, is a professional organization representing more than 26,000 elementary and middle school principals in the United States, Canada and overseas.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Du Pont Co., the former operator of the Savannah River nuclear weapons plant, often failed to notify federal officials about ''unusual'' incidents at the facility's reactors, congressional auditors say.

The General Accounting Office, the investigatory arm of Congress, said Du Pont often did not comply with Energy Department requirements that it report all operating problems at the South Carolina weapons reactors viewed as having ''significant consequence or hazard potential.''

The GAO noted that Du Pont no longer operates Savannah River, having been replaced by Westinghouse Electric Co. in April 1989. It said the field work for its audit was ending when Westinghouse took over.

In a report to Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., the GAO said the Energy Department instituted its ''unusual occurrence reporting'' requirements in 1981 as a way of improving federal oversight over private contractors who operate nuclear weapons plants for the government.

But, GAO investigators said, ''Since the inception of the unusual reporting program there has been a problem at the Savannah River Site of under-reporting reactor-related events.''

As a result, the GAO said, the Energy Department did not receive a ''complete picture'' of reactor operations at Savannah River, where three weapons reactors have been shut down since 1988 due to safety concerns raised by deteriorating equipment and sloppy operating practices by reactor operators.

The GAO said its review of Savannah River records found that between 1982 and 1987 Du Pont notified Energy Department officials of only 39 percent of the events the company identified as having ''significant consequence or hazard potential.''

During that five-year period, Du Pont categorized 71 events at the reactors as unusual occurrences covered by the reporting requirements, but the Energy Department was notified of only 28.

Most of the 71 incidents involved equipment malfunctions or errors by reactor operators that could pose significant safety risks, the GAO said.

For example, it said one incident involved reactor operators mistakenly loading a fuel assembly into the reactor.

GAO investigators said they asked the Energy Department to review its analysis of the under-reporting problem and that agency officials agreed Du Pont had not disclosed many events that should have been reported.

The GAO blamed ''inadequate oversight'' by the Energy Department as the primary cause of the under-reporting problem, noting ''under-reporting has persisted even though (Energy Department) headquarters was aware of it.''

It said the department gave Du Pont too much leeway in determining what events had to be reported. The Energy Department provides ''guidance'' to Du Pont on what events should be disclosed, but does not specifically require that certain types of operating problems be reported.

The GAO said the Energy Department recognized the under-reporting problem and was taking steps to tighten its criteria on what kinds of operating problems ought to be reported.

''However, considering the long-standing nature of the under-reporting problem, we believe (the Energy Department) should do more to strengthen its oversight of contractor operations,'' the GAO said.

The GAO said the Energy Department should establish formal, written procedures for reviewing Westinghouse's internal reports on reactor operations to ensure all unusual occurrences are being reported.

Glenn, chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, and Synar, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee's subcommittee on the environment, requested the GAO report after September 1988 hearings at which they released documents detailing numerous serious reactor incidents at Savannah River over the past several decades.

ATHENS, GREECE (MARCH 5) UPI - Iranian soccer fans twice sang the country's old national anthem ''O Iran'' at the end of matches at a soccer stadium outside Tehran in mild protest of the ruling clerics, a rebel radio said.

Broadcasting in Persian apparently from outside the country, the radio said Sunday the incident occurred Friday, when a huge crowd was assembled in the Freedom Stadium to watch two matches between regional teams.

The clandestine broadcast, monitored in Athens, said the soccer fans sang the anthem ''O Iran'' twice at the end of games, some with tears in their eyes. The Freedom Stadium has a capacity of 100,000 spectators.

The former national anthem was replaced by a more Islamic tune when Iran's clerics took power after the 1979 revolution that topped the shah.

On Feb. 16, soccer fans protesting the cancellation of matches rioted in the streets of Tehran, raising slogans against President Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani and Spiritual Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei.

Sporadic demonstrations and clashes have continued in Iran over the past two weeks, said exile Iranian sources, including the Baghdad-based Mojahedin Khalq Organization and the clandestine radio, which supports Reza Pahlavi, the son of the late shah.

There has been no immediate confirmation from official sources of the demonstrations.

The rebel radio said that after Friday's soccer matches the crowds returning to the city in buses in the evening chanted slogans against Rafsanjani and Khamenei, and sporadic demonstrations continued in the city into the night.

About midnight, gunfire was heard in the city, the broadcast said.

Earlier, sporadic demonstrations occurred in Isfahan and Tehran where crowds estimated at 2,000 to 3,000 assembled to chant slogans against Iran's ruling clerics, the radio said. There were no reported casualties.

The radio said Iranian women have recently been appearing on the streets of Tehran wearing colored headscarves and makeup in defiance of an official ban.

Teachers in the capital and others cities also have been protesting the arrests of colleagues who took part in recent anti-government demonstrations, the broadcast said.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Ms. magazine, the monthly chronicle of the U.S. women's movement for 17 years, will make a June comeback after taking a six-month hiatus, its editors announced.

Robin Morgan, the magazine's editor-in-chief, said Sunday the new incarnation will be called ''Ms: The World of Women,'' and will hit newsracks again in June with no advertisements.

The magazine will be funded solely by subscribers, she said.

Morgan said the new Ms. will tally 100 pages and publish bi-monthly, instead of monthly as before.

The original Ms. was founded in 1972, during the heyday of the women's movement. Publication was suspended in December 1989 after losing considerable amounts of money.

''When Ms. stopped publishing, we were flooded with letters and calls,'' said Gloria Steinem, 55, founding editor of Ms. and now a consulting editor. ''That's what gave us the courage to try something brand new: a magazine supported by and written for its readers, not its advertisers.''

The premiere issue will feature an expose on the advertising controls that affect magazines, written by Steinem, an article on the politics of AIDS research, and a report of and by Eastern European women.

''The magazine will feature an editorial mix of investigative reporting, first-person narratives, outrageous humor, and prize-winning authors, poets, journalists and feminist thinkers,'' Morgan said.

Morgan, who has been active in the feminist movement on an international level as editor of the landmark book ''Sisterhood is Global,'' said Ms. will reflect the international scope of the feminist movement.

An international board of directors representing 25 countries will help direct the editorial content of the new Ms., Morgan said.

Editorial features that were regulars in the old Ms., including Action Boxes, Lobby Alerts, and No Comment, will be back, and will be joined by features on feminist theory, history and debate and women's health and humor, she said.

(MARCH 5) UPI - According to a London newspaper, Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani sent a delegation to Lebanon Sunday to try to win the release of one or more of the Western hostages. Rafsanjani has shown interest in developing better relations with the West, apparently in an effort to improve Iran's failing economy.

Iranian soccer fans displayed their unhappiness with the country's ruling clergy Sunday and sang Iran's old national anthem, ''O Iran.'' A rebel radio broadcast, monitored in Athens, says people have gathered in the streets during the past two weeks to chant slogans against Iran's president and spiritual leader.

Prosecutors say criminal charges could result following Saturday's picket line death of a striking Greyhound employee in Redding, California. The man was crushed to death by a Greyhound bus, but police say the bus's driver... a replacement worker... apparently was NOT aware he had hit the man. Police note the bus was surrounded by pickets at the time of the accident.

Civil rights activists returned to Selma, Alabama, Sunday to mark the 25th anniversary of ''Bloody Sunday.'' On this date in 1965, Selma police attacked protesters marching for the right to vote. The brutal assault on 600 civil rights marchers spurred the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Hank Gathers of Loyola Marymount, one of the nation's most dominant players, died after collapsing Sunday night during a semifinal game inthe West Coast Conference tournament. He was 23.

Gathers, who had suffered a fainting spell in a game earlier this season, had just completed a spectacular dunk when he collapsed at midcourt with 13:34 left in the first half of Loyola Marymount's game against the University of Portland.

Lying at midcourt, Gathers attempted to get to his feet but collapsed and began convulsing as 4,000 fans at Gersten Pavillion fell silent.

Gathers, a Philadelphia native, was surrounded by physicians, his mother Lucille, and boyhood friend and teammate Bo Kimble.

Gathers was taken by ambulance to Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, where he died at 6:55 p.m. PST, according to Loyola Athletic Director Brian Quinn.

''We tried resuscitating him for over an hour and we were unable to generate any activity,'' said cardiologist Dr. Mason Weiss, who added that an autopsy would be conducted.

Both teams left the court after the incident, which occurred at 5:15 p.m. Four hours later, conference officials announced the rest of the tournament would be canceled.

Loyola Marymount, which finished with the best record in the conference season, was given the right to accept the automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament that normally goes with winning the WCC event.

The Lions were to hold a team meeting Monday to decide if they would play in the NCAAs. Should they decline, runner-up Pepperdine would get the bid.

Weiss said Gathers suffered a loss of consciousness because of an interruption of blood flow to the brain. He had a similar episode in December 1989 during a game against Cal-Santa Barbara, which had been determined to be caused by an irregular heartbeat. Weiss said Gathers was ''treated medically and released to participate in all athletic events.''

He underwent a week of tests following the December incident, but doctors could not determine the cause of the blackout. He was put on medication and returned to action after missing only two games.

''There was no true determination to see what caused (the fainting),'' Quinn said. ''You are always concerned any time that happens (that it would happen again). But we were monitoring the situation very carefully.''

Lionel Simmons of No. 14 La Salle, the NCAA's No. 3 all-time scorer and Gathers' close friend, was told of the tragedy during the second half of the Explorers' Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Tournament game in Albany, N.Y. Simmons broke down and was unable to continue play.

Five of La Salle's players grew up with Gathers in Philadelphia.

''Our kids are very very close to him,'' La Salle Coach Speedy Morris said. ''Lionel and him were like brothers. They were told in the later part of the game that he had passed away. Although 3,000 miles apart, these kids are very close.''

A senior, Gathers was the most prolific scorer in Loyola Marymount and WCC history and was expected to be a first-round draft choice in the NBA. Last season, he beame only the second player in NCAA history to lead the nation in scoring (32.7) and rebounding (13.7).

''It's a tremendous loss for our university,'' Quinn said. ''He was an outstanding young man, an athlete and human being. We'll all miss him. He's done so many good things for us. We're all grateful to have been friends with him.''

Elsewhere in college basketball Sunday, a record Carrier Dome crowd watched No. 9 Syracuse earn a share of the Big East title with an overtime victory over No. 5 Georgetown, but Hoyas Coach John Thompson wasn't among those assembled.

Derrick Coleman scored 27 points and Billy Owens added 23 to lead Syracuse to an 89-87 victory, giving the Orangemen the No. 1 seed in this week's Big East tournament in New York.

Thompson was assessed three technical fouls for arguing a foul call late in the first half and was ejected.

Coleman made 7 of 8 free throws following the technicals and Billy Owens drilled a three-pointer for a 10-point turnaround.

''It was probably my fault more than it was the officials' fault,'' Thompson said. ''I probably let my competitive juices overflow. I made a mistake and that's it.''

Thompson threw his trademark white towel and waved at the crowd of 33,015 as he left the floor.

In other Top 20 action Sunday, No. 4 Duke was upended by North Carolina 89-75, No. 10 Purdue nipped No. 8 Michigan 73-71, No. 14 La Salle topped Siena 106-90 and No. 17 Illinois crushed Iowa 118-85.

Also, East Tennessee State became the fourth team to earn an automatic berth in the NCAA Tournament with a 96-75 victory over Appalachian State in the final of the Southern Conference Tournament.

At Chapel Hill, N.C., King Rice led five Tar Heels in double figures as

North Carolina beat Duke, giving Clemson the Atlantic Coast Conference title. North Carolina improved to 19-11 and 8-6 in the ACC. Duke fell to 23-7 and 9-5.

At West Lafayette Ind., Jimmy Oliver sank a 16-foot jumper with two seconds left to pull the Boliermakers within a half-game of Michigan State in the Big Ten. Purdue, 21-6 and 13-4, got 26 points from Stephen Scheffler and will play Michigan State in the Big Ten finale next Sunday. Michigan fell to 20-7 and 10-6.

At Albany, N.Y., Lionel Simmons scored 26 points and Jack Hurd added 19 Sunday to help La Salle to the MAAC championship game, where the Explorers will face Fordham. La Salle, 28-1, won its 20th straight game.

At Champaign, Ill., Kendall Gill scored 25 points and the Fighting Illini made 13 three-pointers in the rout of the Hawkeyes. Andy Kaufmann added 21 points and Ervin Small 19 for Illinois, 20-7 and 10-7. Iowa slipped to 12-15 and 4-13.

At Asheville, N.C., Greg Dennis scored 24 points and grabbed 12 rebounds to lead East Tennessee State to its the second straight Southern Conference championship. East Tennessee's Keith Jennings, named the tournament's most valuable player, scored 12 of his 16 points in the first half.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Larry Bird, who made 71 consecutive free throws earlier this season, failed to deliver in a crucial situation Sunday against the Chicago Bulls.

The league's leading free-throw shooter missed the second of three free throws with 11.6 seconds remaining, allowing the Bulls to post a 118-114 triumph over the Boston Celtics.

''It was absolutely beyond belief that Bird would miss,'' Bulls Coach Phil Jackson said.

With the Celtics trailing 115-112, Bird missed a three-point attempt, but was fouled by Scottie Pippen. The Chicago forward was also whistled for a technical.

Bird, who entered the game with a .934 free-throw percentage, converted the technical, but missed the first of two free throws. In February, Bird was closing in on Calvin Murphy's NBA record of 78 straight free throws but had the streak stopped at Houston.

''He's the guy I'd want on the line,'' Boston's John Bagley said.

Dennis Johnson and Reggie Lewis each also missed a free throw in the final 1:14. Lewis' miss, like Bird's, could have tied the score.

Chicago, which scored 40 first-quarter points, won its eighth straight game, the Bulls' longest winning streak since the 1983-84 season. The Bulls were paced by Michael Jordan with 36 points.

Pippen made one of two free throws with 10.2 seconds left, and Craig Hodges added two more free throws with five-tenths of a second remaining to end the Celtics' four-game winning streak.

Chicago played without starting center Bill Cartwright, sidelined with back spasms for the ninth straight game. The Bulls, who are 8-1 in his absence, took a 14-point lead in the first half.

Boston, however, came back to take a 71-70 edge. The Bulls took the lead for good at 109-107 on Horace Grant's layup with 1:40 remaining.

''It was a shootout, gunfire versus gunfire,'' Jordan said.

Bird finished with 38 points to lead the Celtics, and Robert Parish contributed 18 points and 18 rebounds. Rookie Michael Smith added 16 points. Pippen added 22 pionts for Chicago.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - The American Express company said Sunday it will buy all the publically held shares of its brokerage firm, Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

The move is a complete turnaround for American Express, which for months has been seeking to reduce its 68 percent stake in the Wall Street investment bank's common shares.

Shearson said American Express plans to acquire the outstanding Shearson shares through a tax-free merger of an American Express subsidiary into the brokerage firm.

Under the proposed deal, each share of Shearson common stock will be exchanged for .426 of a share of American Express common stock, Shearson said.

The exchange ratio was to be based on the respective closing prices of the two companies' common stock on the New York Stock Exchange on Friday, Shearson said.

Shearson's board of directors has formed an independent special committee to consider the proposal from the perspective of the firm's public common stockholders, American Express said.

The committee has retained Dillon Read & Co. and a law firm to aid in its deliberations and expects to reach a deterimination soon, American Express said.

''The proposal is a strong expression of the American Express commitment to SLH,'' said Howard Clark, Shearson's president and CEO.

American Express had been seeking to reduce its holdings in Shearson because the investment bank's worsening financial position has been a drain on American Express' earnings.

By purchasing the outstanding shares and making Shearson a privately held firm, American Express would likely make it easier to sell off unprofitable divisions or any other assets it finds undesirable.

The move to buy up the remaining Shearson shares comes weeks after the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert last month.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Philippine officials report 20 people died during Sunday's unsuccessful but bloody uprising against President Aquino . A rebel governor and 200 rebel soldiers seized a hotel and allegedly killed a high-ranking military officer. The Philippine military is under orders to capture the mutinous governor, Rodolfo Aquinaldo, ''dead or alive.'' Aquinaldo escaped when the army stormed the hotel.

Army troops in the troubled South African homeland of Ciskei seized power during a bloodless coup Sunday. President-for-life Lennox Sebe was toppled during the backlash against corruption and human rights abuses. Sebe has asked Pretoria to restore his power, but the South African government says it will NOT interfere in the rebellion. Sebe has ruled the independent territory with an iron fist since 1981.

Former ambassador Walter Annenberg donated 50-Million dollars to the United Negro College Fund Sunday. In Annenberg's words- ''When one segment of the population is behind... you have a very unwholesome citizenry in the country.'' President Bush, who serves as the U-N-C-F's honorary fund drive chairman, was present during the ceremony in Rancho Mirage, California.

(MARCH 5) UPI - A national poll of elementary school principals finds a majority of elementary schools have drug education classes... some beginning as early as kindergarten. The National Association of Elementary School Principals survey of 495 principals also shows many schools have programs to educate youngsters about AIDS and sex. Only 37 percent of the principals said there was NOT a drug problem in elementary schools.

A Nicaraguan rebel leader says a three-member team named by President-elect Chamorro will meet with rebel leaders in Honduras to discuss the demobilization of the Contras. Chamorro has called on the Contras to disband immediately, but they say they will NOT do so until she assumes office April 25th.

It's NOT everyday someone walks down the street carrying a missile under their arm. So maybe the panicked response from police in Princeton Township, New Jersey, was understandable. But 27-year-old John Watson wants to know why authorities kept him locked up for an hour Sunday and warned townsfolk to run for their lives. The missile turned out to be a rusty World War Two-vintage dud. Watson says he would like the missile returned to him... if it isN'T at all dangerous.

#90064u0312 03/05/1990 ~United Press International
(MARCH 5) UPI - Prosecutors were studying possible criminal charges in the death of a striking Greyhound worker crushed by a bus in California, while company and union officials disagreed about how many employees had returned to work on the third day of an increasingly tense national walkout.

Robert Waterhouse, 59, was crushed to death Saturday in Redding, Calif., by a bus driven by a replacement driver outside the bus depot.

Police investigator John Severson said Sunday the replacement driver, Theodore Graham, apparently was not aware that he had hit a depot retaining wall and Waterhouse, who was crushed against the concrete.

Police said Graham's bus was surrounded by pickets as he drove down the depot's back alley and that ''he felt the picketers were still trying to harass him and prevent his departure.''

Severson said the Shasta County district attorney asked to review police interviews with 38 bus passengers and nearly 30 witnesses before deciding on charges. ''This situation is not clear-cut,'' Severson said. ''There is plenty of blame to go around.''

Greyhound spokesman George Gravley said Graham was relieved of driving duties pending the investigation, a routine action when a driver is involved in a serious accident.

The 700 replacement drivers plus 1,100 workers crossing picket lines enabled the company to put 29 percent of its routes in operation as of Sunday, up from 25 percent Saturday and 20 percent Friday, Gravley said. About 350 of the workers were drivers, giving the company about ''1,000 experienced drivers on the road,'' he said.

''We are running 29 percent of service today (Sunday),'' said Elizabeth Hale, a Greyhound spokeswoman in Dallas. ''We expect by the end of the week to be at about 50 perecnt of normal scheduling.

Greyhound officials said replacement drivers must have at least one year of experience driving a bus or truck at highway speeds between cities, be licensed and ''have a driving and personal record acceptable to Greyhound.''

Edward Strait, president of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, disagreed with the company's count of workers who had crossed picket lines and also questioned the qualifications of replacement drivers.

Strait said in a statement that strikers had been ''meticulously counting'' workers crossing lines and determined that only 95 union drivers had returned to work as of midday Sunday.

''That means that .. 1.5 percent of the 6,300 drivers represented by the Amalgamated Transit Union are transporting passengers for Greyhound Lines, Inc.,'' Strait said.

''We ... hope that Greyhound management will soon realize that the only way they will be able to provide the traveling public with safe and affordable intercity bus transportation is by returning to the negotiating table for good-faith bargaining on a fair and equitable contract.''

The union has accused Greyhound of bad-faith bargaining for refusing to modify its last three-year offer. The company said the proposal included a 6.9 percent increase in pay and benefits over the first year, the most it could manage without raising fares to its passengers, many from smaller cities who depend on Greyhound as their only means of intercity transportation.

Union officials said the proposal had been rejected by 92 percent of its 9,000 members, who took a 22 percent pay cut when new owners bought Greyhound in 1987.

With no new talks scheduled, picket lines across the country remained tense, with passengers waiting in crowded terminals amid piles of luggage.

There were scattered reports of violence.

A driver reported that someone in a car fired a shotgun at his bus as it entered the Indiana Toll Road just east of the Illinois-Indiana state line. There were no reported injuries.

Police in Mount Laurel, N.J. said two striking Greyhound employees have been charged with throwing a rock at a company bus. The rock struck the bus on the driver's side windshield, but did not penetrate the safety glass and no one was injured.

An elderly woman was knocked to the ground during a ruckus touched off when a Greyhound bus drove through a picket line of striking drivers in Tampa, Fla., and a Jacksonville replacement driver reported he was beaten by unknown assailants.

At the Los Angeles terminal, where union pickets in black armbands hurled insults at the temporary drivers and encouraged them to honor the strike, passengers described being forced to give directions to the non-union drivers who became lost.

''The drivers didn't know how to drive, the passengers had to give them directions,'' said Karie Howe, 33, who refused to board the bus again and planned to continue her journey from Little Rock, Ark., to Sacramento by car.

Police in Memphis, Tenn., were searching for a mentally handicapped and epileptic passenger who was scheduled to transfer buses in Memphis and failed to arrive Friday at his destination in Chicago.

Family members feared 27-year-old Earl Lee Harris, who cannot read and whose speech is sometimes difficult to understand, may have been ''lost in the mess'' when Greyhound canceled some routes, said sister-in-law Judy Allen.

Besides 6,300 drivers, the union represents 1,475 maintenance workers and 1,660 office workers in telephone information centers in Omaha, Neb., and Charlotte, N.C., and the accounting center in West Des Moines, Iowa.

The last strike against Greyhound was in 1983 and lasted 48 days. The bus company was sold by Greyhound Corp. in 1987 to a group of Dallas-based investors headed by Fred G. Currey.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Andy Rooney said he ''learned a lot'' from his 24-day suspension from CBS's ''60 Minutes'' broadcast and ended his network television hiatus by defending his record of supporting racial justice.

Rooney, who was suspended without pay Feb. 8 from his $800,000 a year job as commentator and returned to the air Sunday, also said he regretted making a remark that offended homosexuals.

''I've always had it in the back of my mind that I was doing some little bit of good,'' Rooney said at the end of the ''60 Minutes'' broadcast Sunday.

''Now I was to be known for having done not good, but bad. I'd be known for the rest of my life as a racist bigot and as someone who had made life a little more difficult for homosexuals,'' Rooney said. ''I felt terrible about that and I've learned a lot.''

Rooney said that being known as a bigot hurt, but asked rhetorically what he could say to prove to prove otherwise. ''Do I say, 'I'm not a racist?' That sounds too much like 'I'm not a crook.'

''How do I apologize to homosexuals for hurting them with a remark I made that I didn't realize would hurt them?'' Rooney said.

The television essayist said he has a long record of fighting racial injustice, including an arrest in the Army during World War II for riding with fellow black soldiers in the back of a bus in St. Augustine, Fla., and in 1970 as a journalist while working on the murder of civil rights leader Medgar Evers.

''It's demeaning to have to sit here and defend myself,'' Rooney said.

''I wrote a broadcast called 'Of Black America' for Bill Cosby in 1968 that I'm proud of. In 1970 I wrote the show called 'Harry and Lena' for Harry Belafonte and Lena Horne. I like Lena better than Harry. Does that make me a feminist?'' Rooney said.

Rooney called the response from friends and viewers expressing support ''overwhelming,'' and asked, ''How do I live up to such praise? Let's face it, even on the nights when I'm good, I'm not that good.''

The commentator and best-selling author admitted that he has opinions that irritate people. ''You're damn right I do. That's what I'm here for.''

Rooney said he once asked a guest to leave his home for using the word ''nigger. I'd feel the same today if anyone used an insulting word about homosexuals.''

It was the first ''60 Minutes'' essay by the commentator since he was given a reprieve from his three-month suspension last week.

CBS News President David Burke, who suspended Rooney after publication of an interview he gave to a newspaper with a homosexual readership, said Thursday that the 24-day banishment from the airwaves was long enough.

Rooney was suspended for three months without pay for remarks about blacks he was quoted as making during a telephone interview with Chris Bull, a reporter for the Advocate, a biweekly newspaper for homosexuals published in Los Angeles.

Rooney denied making the remarks, and Bull said he did not tape record the interview.

BEIJING (MARCH 5) UPI - The Soviet Union is concerned that a planned trip to Moscow by Chinese Premier Li Peng could be disrupted by embarrassing demonstrations by opposition groups, possibly straining recently restored Sino-Soviet relations, East bloc sources say.

The hard-line premier, educated in Moscow before the 1960s Sino-Soviet split over ideological and territorial disputes, is scheduled to visit the Soviet Union sometime in April. China has yet to announce an exact date.

Invited personally by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev during his ground-breaking trip to Beijing last May, Li will be the first Chinese premier to visit the Soviet Union since Zhou Enlai in 1960.

But just as Gorbachev's trip to Beijing was dogged by massive pro-democracy protests, which overshadowed normalization of Sino-Soviet relations, Li's visit could prove a tempting target for newly emboldened opposition forces in the Soviet Union.

''It's quite possible. Some groups were very critical of China over June '' said an East bloc diplomat, referring to Beijing's violent military suppression of last spring's democracy movement.

Soviet authorities ''want to be very careful'' to avoid protests, he said, noting the trip is crucial for the Soviet Union and Li.

Li's trip comes as China's leadership, isolated further by the recent liberalizations in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, is maintaining its economic and governmental ties with Moscow, but is issuing sharp internal criticism of Gorbachev.

Especially troubling was Gorbachev's move to relinquish the Communist Party's monopoly on power.

Shortly after the Soviet plenum in early February, China's Communist Party issued a document, now reaching lower-level party members, accusing Gorbachev of ''changing the shape of the greatest socialist nation,'' Chinese sources said.

It said Gorbachev has ''given up the leading role of the Communist Party and the dictatorship of the proletariat, and is no longer following the socialist path,'' said a party member with access to the document.

''China thinks the Soviets are going down the revisionist road,'' he said.

The document urged people to write internal articles criticizing Gorbachev - not for the public state press - and said relations will continue.

So far, the principle appears to be working. A Soviet military delegation was recently in China for continuing talks on reducing forces of the two nations along their common border. Soviet officials reported progress in the talks.

''Anything advantageous to China with the Soviets will go well now - military, trade,'' predicted a Chinese government official.

''But when Gorbachev invited Li last May, who ever imagined the state of present affairs - that China and the Soviet Union would go in different directions?'' he said.

Gorbachev's move came as a bitter surprise to China's aging leadership, which had been relying on reports from Chinese intelligence predicting the Soviet leader's imminent demise, according to Western diplomats and Chinese sources.

But one East European diplomat doubted Chinese intelligence had actually erred, pointing instead to a historical tendency to tell China's authoritarian leaders what they want to hear.

''Do you tell your emperor that his enemy is stronger than he is?'' he asked rhetorically.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Light snow fell over the Great Lakes and isolated parts of the Middle Atlantic Coast Monday while a Pacific frontal system brought rain to northern California and scattered showers dampened the Southwest.

A weak low-pressure trough slowly sagging southward across the western Great Lakes brought snow to Michigan. The National Weather Service issued a snow advisory for Detroit and Ann Arbor, where 3 inches of new snow had fallen since Sunday night.

In northern portions of the state, skies were clear to partly cloudy, but the mercury dropped below zero, and plunged as low as 6 degrees below in Marquette, Mich.

Snowfall tapered to a dusting by early Monday across northern Ohio, with Cleveland reporting about an inch.

Illinois and Missouri reported generally cloudy skies but temperatures remained on the warm side, ranging from 42 degrees in Springfield, Ill., to 53 in Joplin, Mo.

Light snow fell over much of western Pennsylvania, with up to an inch accumulating in some northwestern areas. The eastern part of the state saw mostly cloudy skies, with flurries reported in northern areas. Lows ranged from the teens to mid 20s throughout the state, as well as in neighboring Maryland and southern New Jersey.

Scattered showers and a few thunderstorms struck parts of the Southwest, as storm systems rumbled through New Mexico and Oklahoma. Rain fell across the Rio Grande Valley, and New Mexico's west central mountains and central highlands.

Patchy and dense morning fog were the rule along the Louisiana coast and into Texas.

High pressure over the South was responsible for generally fair and mild weather, with patches of high, thin clouds drifting through the region. Temperatures ranged from 37 in Knoxville, Tenn., to 47 in Atlanta, 49 in Jacksonville, Fla., 50 in Charleston, S.C., and 62 in Miami.

In the West, a Pacific frontal system brought bursts of rain to northern and central California, including 1.3 inches near the Oregon border. But clouds were blowing out of the area and clearing was expected Monday night.

It was cloudy and drizzly over much of Southern California Sunday - good news for 20,000 runners who participated in the 5th annual Los Angeles Marathon. But motorists driving between Palm Springs and Palm Desert were warned to be extremely cautious due to gusty winds and blowing dust and sand. Visibility on Highway 10 dropped to virtually zero in some areas.

In New England, clear and cold weather started settling in after a week that saw temperatures top 50 degrees. Some snow was reported in New Hampshire and Vermont's northern mountains.

SEOUL, South Korea (MARCH 5) UPI - Evidence indicates North Korea initiated the newly discovered tunnel carved through the demilitarized zone between South and North Korea, and its existence was a ''flagrant violation'' of the Korean armistice, the United Nations Command said Monday.

U.S. Navy Rear Adm. Larry Vogt, chief UN Command delegate to the Korean Military Armistice Commission, said in a message to his North Korean counterpart, Choi Ui-ung, that evidence pointed toward North Korean responsibility for the tunnel, a command spokesman said.

''We have evidence of another tunnel under the DMZ, which is an extremely serious violation of the Korean Armistice Agreement,'' Vogt said in his message passed through the truce village of Panmunjom, 35 miles north of Seoul.

''All the evidence gathered thus far by our multinational special investigation team indicates the tunnel began inside your side of the DMZ and extends over 1,000 meters into our position of the DMZ. Such a tunnel could be used by military forces and represents a flagrant violation of the Armistice Agreement.''

Vogt proposed that both sides have their Joint Observer Teams meet Tuesday to investigate the underground pathway discovered in an eastern sector of the DMZ.

The latest tunnel measures about 6 feet wide, 6 feet high, and was built in a layer of granite 475 feet underground and reached nearly 1,150 yards into the South from the border, the officials said.

South Korea has urged North Korea to stop provocations such as digging tunnels and immediately agree to resume inter-Korea peace talks that would eventually lead to national reunification.

Choi Byung-bo, spokesman for the government National Unification Board, said in a statement that the newly discovered tunnel, the fourth one found was proof North Korea has yet to abandon its hope for a communist takeover of the South.

''If the South and the North are to bring to an end tension and confrontation and move toward peace and reunification, the North must first abandon its ... reckless attempts to disturb and topple the other side such as digging invasion tunnels,'' he said.

''We urge North Korea to stop going against the global trend for openness and reform and agree to immediate resumption of suspended talks between the South and the North to meet the expectation of the entire Korean people for peace and reunification.''

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Dr. Veronica Prego's landmark AIDS negligence case against the city hospital system enters its ninth week Monday and the protracted trial has already taken its toll on two alternate jurors.

The two were released Friday after they successfully argued the lengthy case had posed ''financial hardship.''

However, Justice Aaron Bernstein ordered the two not to speak to the media until a verdict was reached, saying if any of their comments reached the jury it could be grounds for a mistrial.

The trial in Brooklyn state Supreme Court, initially estimated to last five weeks, was scheduled to resume Monday and head into its ninth week.

Prego is suing the city's Health and Hospital Corp. and two physicians, contending that she contracted AIDS from accidentally pricking her finger with a contaminated needle in Kings County Hospital in Brooklyn on Jan. 12 1983.

Prego, 32, who was an ''extern'' at the big city-run hospital at the time of her infection, also contends her confidentiality was violated during a blood-testing study five years ago.

As a result of the study, Prego learned that she had the AIDS virus.

In the most recent testimony in the case, Dr. Carl Korpi, a Suffolk County physician, testified that Dr. Joyce Fogel, one of the defendants, frequently left medical waste at the bedsides of patients. Prego argues the practice led to her infection with the deadly virus

Prego said she was cleaning up medical debris left by Fogel on a bed after some blood was drawn from an AIDS patient when she was jabbed by an infected needle.

The HHC, however, has maintained that there was no negligence. Fogel has said she was not present when the blood was drawn, and that she did not cause the injury to Prego.

''No one ever said that medical students did not on occassion help clean up but this is not what happened on the night in question,'' Fogel said in a rare interview with reporters Friday. She has attended every day of the trial.

''Being accused unjustly and being accused by someone who was your colleague is a very unpleasant thing,'' she said, adding that she ''couldn't imagine'' why Prego had made the allegations.

PATTAYA, THAILAND (MARCH 5) UPI - Thai Princess Maha Chakri Sirindorn opened the World Conference on Education For All Monday, calling for greater cooperation to achieve global literacy within this decade.

''Whether we can eliminate illiteracy by providing basic education within the next 10 years will depend on the cooperation at every level from the governmental and private sectors as well as from the independent agencies, which must all coordinate their efforts around the world,'' she said in her opening address to some 1,500 delegates from 165 nations.

The meeting is the largest convened on education, in keeping with the goal of the United Nations to eliminate illiteracy worldwide in the 1990s.

According to conference statistics, there are an estimated 100 million children in the world with no access to primary education and 963 million adults who are illiterate.

''Of the estimated 963 million adult illiterates today, 920 million are in developing countries,'' said Fredrico Mayor, director-general of the U.N. Economic and Social Council, in an opening speech to the conference, which is sponsored by the World Bank and three U.N. organizations.

It has attracted hundreds of public and private delegates and three heads of state - the presidents of Kenya, Ecuador and Bangladesh - to the resort of Jomtien at Pattaya, 93 miles southeast of Bangkok.

The conference, which ends Friday, was expected to approve a ''world declaration'' on the need for education for all and a ''plan to make such an ambitious goal more achievable.''

''The challenge of education for all may appear daunting,'' Mayor said. ''In addition to millions of devoted and qualified women and men, educational know-how and materials as well as very considerable amounts of money, we may well need a revolution of the mind to succeed.''

Much will depend on the political will of the countries involved and the willing participation of all members of society in achieving educational goals, he said.

Hussein Mohammad Ershad, president of Bangladesh said, ''The great powers are in a position where it is hopeful they will see a drastic reduction in expenditure for military purposes and will divert it to educational purposes.''

(MARCH 5) UPI - Around the world... around the clock... the latest news from U-P-I.

A top college basketball player with known heart problems collapsed and died last night in Los Angeles. Hank Gathers, a 23-year-old six-foot-seven player for Loyola Marymount, fell to the floor and suffered convulsions during a game with Portland. Gathers had a history of irregular heartbeats. He fainted during a December game... missed the next two and then resumed play. He was the nation's sixth leading scorer, averaging 29 points and 10-point-eight rebounds a game.

Former national security adviser John Poindexter goes on trial today. Poindexter is the highest-ranking Reagan administration official to stand trial in the Iran-Contra case. Poindexter faces five criminal charges, including accusations that he obstructed congressional inquiries and made false statements to Congress.

Greyhound officials and leaders of the striking union disagree about how many employees are crossing the picket lines. Greyhound says that 700 replacement drivers plus 350 NON-striking drivers enabled the company to operate on 29 percent of its routes, as of yesterday. The union says only 95 union drivers are working.

The shuttle Atlantis sailed through its latest mission in what appears to be excellent condition. NASA says the only obvious problem is a minor leak in the spacecraft's hydraulic system. Atlantis returned to Earth yesterday from a military mission.

A report says an F-B-I counter-intelligence agent has been suspended and had his security clearance revoked because he is suspected of spying for Cuba. The report says many of the agent's colleagues feel that he may be a victim of retaliation because he was involved in a lawsuit by Hispanic employees against the F-B-I.

(MARCH 5) UPI - The watchdog arm of Congress says incidents at nuclear weapons plants have been under-reported. The General Accounting Office blamed the Energy Department's system of overseeing weapons plants. The G-A-O says Energy officials have recognized the problem and are taking steps to solve it.

The dollar is still climbing in Tokyo. The Bank of Japan is believed to have sold an estimated 500-Million dollars today to slow the dollar. Tokyo stock prices weakened as investigators heard reports that the United States and Japan re-affirmed co-operation to stabilize the foreign exchange market.

The deposed president of the South African independent black homeland of Ciskei urged Pretoria today to restore him to power. Ciskei President Lennox Sebe was ousted in a bloodless coup while out of the territory. He is in Hong Kong today. Army troops are in control in Ciskei.

Poland reports that a mass grave of as many as one-thousand people has been opened in a southern village. The Polish news agency says the people in the grave were believed to have been killed by the Soviet secret police. A resident of the village said the people were executed by the Soviets in 1944.

This year's Easter Seal telethon collected a record 42-Million dollars for the disabled. The 19th annual telethon brought in 13 percent more than the record amount raised last year. An estimated 60 Million viewers tuned in during the 20-hour live broadcast with host Pat Boone and co-hosts Mary Frann and Rob Weller.

(MARCH 5) UPI - A star basketball player dies during a game... Soviet election results are due today... the Greyhound strike continues... and John Poindexter's trial is set to begin. Those stories and more, next from U-P-I.

Moments after bringing a crowd of four-thousand people to its feet with a slam dunk last night, Loyala Maramount star Hank Gathers crumbled to the floor near midcourt during a West Coast conference tournament game in Los Angeles.

Gathers was later pronounced dead at a hospital.

The 23-year-old Philadelphia native tried to lift himself up, but fell back down in convulsions. The stunned crowd became silent as they watched his sobbing mother pound the floor with her fist, screaming for help.

Three physicians attended to Gathers on the court. Once removed from the gym, paramedics worked feverishly to revive him.

Their efforts were UNsuccessful. Gathers died after losing consciousness because of an interruption of blood flow to the brain.

Gathers fainted during a game in December because of an irregular heartbeat, but missed only two games.

Initial election results are expected later today from the Soviet Union's three major republics.

Voters in Russia, the Ukraine and Byelorussia went to the polls yesterday to select candidates to serve in regional and local offices.

The elections offered voters choices among Russian nationalists, orthodox communists and radical reformers. In some places, as many as 20 candidates tried for one spot.

The official Soviet news agency Tass called the balloting ''an alternative choice and a real contest of candidates.''

Soviet President Gorbachev hailed the vote as the ''people's referendum on perestroika.'' He added that he hopes Soviets will take the opportunity to... in his words... ''come forward and take care of themselves.''

But according to one voter, it may be a while before Gorbachev's wishes come to be. The voter said... ''Soviet voters are just like American ones. They doN'T know who they're voting for and doN'T really care.''

(MARCH 5) UPI - Jury selection is expected to start today in the Iran-Contra criminal trial of Ronald Reagan's former national security adviser, John Poindexter.

Poindexter is the highest-ranking Reagan-era figure to be tried on charges related to funneling aid to Nicaraguan Contras at a time when Congress banned such assistance.

Poindexter's defense will include testimony from former President Reagan. A federal judge ordered that Reagan answer questions pertinent to Poindexter's defense.

However, it's UNclear how helpful Reagan's videotaped testimony will be to Poindexter's cause.

During the session taped in Los Angeles, Reagan said more than 124 times that he could NOT recall significant events relating to the affair. He also insisted he NEVER authorized illegal acts by administration officials.

But legal experts say Poindexter's attorneys can put together an effective defense by playing up the conception that Reagan gave his assistants free reign to pursue actions that matched his overall policy.

The fourth day of a strike against Greyhound is beginning... with NO sign that contract talks will be resumed.

Greyhound spokeswoman Elizabeth Hale says 29 percent of Greyhound's routes were serviced yesterday. She expects the company to be at about 50 percent of the normal scheduling by next weekend.

Picket lines across the country remain tense, with passengers waiting in crowded terminals overflowing with luggage. There are scattered reports of violence.

An elderly woman was knocked to the ground during a ruckus touched off when a Greyhound bus drove through a picket line of striking drivers in Tampa, Florida. A Jacksonville replacement driver reported he was beaten by unknown assailants.

A driver reported that someone in a car fired a shotgun at his bus as it entered the Indiana Toll Road just east of the Illinois-Indiana state line. There were NO injuries.

Police in Mount Laurel, New Jersey, say two striking Greyhound employees have been charged with throwing a rock at a bus. The rock did NOT penetrate the safety glass and no one was hurt.

Prosecutors are studying possible criminal charges in the death Satuday of a striking Greyhound worker crushed by a bus operated by a replacement driver in California.

(MARCH 5) UPI - There are fresh reports of efforts to convince terrorists in Lebanon to release one or more of their 18 Western hostages.

The Independent newspaper of London reported that an Iranian delegation made UNofficial visits to the Syrian and Lebanese capitals. The mission of the Iranian negotiators reportedly was to organize the release of one or more of the captives held by Shiite Moslem groups loyal to Iran.

The newspaper said leading Iranian figures and U-S officials- including former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance- have already held secret talks in several neutral countries.

The newspaper says the Americans involved were careful NOT to have contacts with present officials in Washington... because of the official policy against negotiating with terrorists.

Vice President Quayle denied that any negotiations for the release of the hostages are occuring. The vice president said he did NOT want to give any credibility to the reports... although he said and President Bush want the hostages freed.

Colleagues of a suspended F-B-I agent think he's being punished because of his role in a lawsuit against the agency.

Fernando Matta of Miami, a decorated counter-intelligence agent, is accused of spying for Cuba. A report says the Cuban-American was suspended and lost his security clearance as a result of a three-year investigation.

But the report says many of the agent's colleagues have rallied to his defense... saying he appears to be a victim of retaliation because of his crucial role in a landmark discrimination suit that Hispanic employees filed against the F-B-I.

In the 1988 discrimination suit brought by 300 Hispanic agents, a federal judge in Texas ordered the F-B-I to make sweeping changes in its promotion policies. Matta testified against the F-B-I at the trial.

An F-B-I official rejected the accusation and called it ridiculous.

SEREIPHEAP, CAMBODIA (MARCH 5) UPI - Prince Norodom Sihanouk, accustomed to lavish palaces around the world, said Monday his return to life in a jungle base within artillery range of his Vietnamese-backed enemies has restored his self-esteem.

''I feel much happier to be on Khmer soil and relatively in danger,'' the 68-year-old former king said in his first interview since returning last week to live in a resistance-held area near the Thai-Cambodian border.

The prince, known for his love of good wine and fine French cuisine, said with what appeared to be a touch of regret that he ate only Cambodian food at the base.

He insisted he did not miss the physical comforts of his home in France or his palaces in China and North Korea.

''In my palaces I had everything perfect as far as comfort is concerned, but I did not have self-esteem,'' he said.

Sihanouk, speaking with customary exuberance for more than two hours, told a small group of reporters that he had offered his palaces to former Prime Minister Pol Pot and other leaders of the Khmer Rouge.

The Khmer Rouge leadership has been an embarrassment to the three-party resistance because of its brutal record during its 1975-1979 rule when more than 1 million people died from execution, hunger and disease.

He said the offer was rejected by nominal Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan who said Pol Pot would never leave Cambodia ''because he is a great patriot.''

Sihanouk last lived in Cambodia as a pampered prisoner of the Khmer Rouge until he escaped just before a Vietnamese invasion force reached Phnom Penh Jan. 7, 1979.

The white-haired prince seemed eager to confront speculation he could not adapt to the simple life of the base, about a mile from the Thai border.

''See how different the bathroom is from my palace,'' he said, showing pictures of a comfortable little wooden house and a simple bathroom. Sihanouk apologized to the group for not bringing them to the house because of what he said were fears government gunners would be able to pinpoint its location and shell it.

Sihanouk said he had an underground bunker near his house, but had yet to use it.

As the sound of artillery fire loomed, Sihanouk called on Thailand to host new negotiations between China and Vietnam, the two main backers of the war in Cambodia.

Sihanouk said the threat of a cutoff in the arms supplies through Thailand would possibly persuade the Khmer Rouge to accept a peace settlement.

''Thailand should organize something in Bangkok to get China and Vietnam together,'' he said. ''I think only Thailand can save Cambodia.''

Sihanouk's son, Prince Norodom Ranariddh, commander of the forces loyal to Sihanouk, was concerned for his father's safety. He said his father actually moved among three houses in three areas for security reasons.

Throughout the interview, the area was guarded by troops wearing new U.S.-supplied camouflage uniforms and carrying new French-made assault rifles.

Sihanouk insisted he received only ''non-lethal'' assistance from the United States, including uniforms, medicine, radio equipment and food.

Most arms and ammunition came from China, he said.

A whitewater tank truck painted with the name ''Catholic Office for emergency Relief Service'' rolled in on the rutted road from Thailand.

He said he would leave Cambodia only for new rounds of peace talks, most likely in Bangkok, Thailand, or Paris.

''I am staying in the jungle until I die or until my country is liberated '' he said.

For the benefit of a television crew, Sihanouk visited nearby Sereipheap village, collection of straw huts inhabited by about 700 people.

The villagers shouted ''Long live, long live'' at the direction of a soldier, but seemed genuinely happy to greet Sihanouk. Some went down in the dust to touch his feet. Others gave him the prayer-like clasped hands greeting of the Khmer.

Sihanouk, sweating under the midday sun, greeted each person who came to see him.

CINCINNATI (MARCH 5) UPI - Ohioans surveyed in a recent poll give broad support to President Bush's job performance, but are less enthusiastic about Vice President Dan Quayle.

The Ohio Poll, released Monday, shows 74 percent of respondents approving of Bush's job performance, 20 percent disapproving and 6 percent neutral or with no opinion.

Al Tuchfarber, director of the University of Cincinnati's Institute for Polich Research, said the president wins a majority of support in all major demographic and political groups in the state.

Bush's rating is only slightly below the mark he received in September of last year and is above his rating last April.

Among Democrats, 62 percent approved of Bush's performance, while 58 percent of blacks supported the president's performance.

But the vice president fares less well, with 45 percent approving of Quayle's job performance, 24 percent disapproving and 31 percent neutral or with no opinion.

The Ohio Poll is conducted for The Cincinnati Post, The Dayton Daily News and WKRC-TV.

The random telephone survey of 802 registered voters was held Feb. 2-12. The poll has a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Preliminary election results from the Soviet Union indicate that outspoken politician Boris Yeltsin has been elected to the Russian Republic's Parliament. The official Tass news agency says Yeltsin rolled to victory over 11 rivals. It also appears as if democratic bloc candidates swept away orthodox communists in the nation's second-largest city, Leningrad.

The college basketball community is mourning the loss of one of its brightest stars. Loyola Marymount's Hank Gathers collapsed during last night's West Coast Conference championship tournament in Los Angeles and died several hours later. News of the East Coast native's death caused several friends on LaSalle University's basketball team to be unable to finish their Metro Athletic Conference game in Albany, New York.

The U-S Geological Survey says a minor earthquake shook parts of Idaho and Wyoming last night. The quake registered three-point-nine on the Richter Scale. Its epicenter was about 30 miles southwest of Jackson, Wyoming. A spokeswoman for the U-S Geological Survey says there are NO reports of damage from the tremor.

The hunt is still on for renegade Philippine politician Rodolfo Aguinaldo. President Aquino has sent special marine units to the area 220 miles north of Manila where the bandit governor's ragtag army battled government troops yesterday and allegedly killed a top military official held hostage. A military spokesman says more than 200 of Aguinaldo's men have surrendered.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Opposition members of the Japanese parliament criticized Prime Minister Kaifu for making what they say are promises to the United States that caN'T be kept. During his California weekend summit with President Bush, Kaifu said he'd try to reduce the nearly 50-BILLION-dollar U-S trade deficit with Japan. The head of Japan's Socialist Party says Kaifu offered promises ''without making the necessary preparations at home.''

Television commentator Andy Rooney returned to the airwaves last night and told viewers that he is NOT a racist. After serving 24 days of a three-month network suspension, Rooney said he found it demeaning to have to clear the air about his attitudes toward blacks and homosexuals. Rooney was suspended after a newspaper quoted him as making racist comments. He denied making the quotes.

The head of a 10-member congressional delegation in South Africa says reforms set in place by President F-W de Klerk ''represent a rare window of opportunity through which a new South Africa can emerge.'' (MARCH 5) - Move over, Fat Albert. Bunions Bradford is in town.

Bill Cosby, a one-man entertainment conglomerate with his TV sitcom, best-selling books and stand-up comedy, has another iron in the fire.

The Coz, one of the most passionate advocates for jazz on the scene today, makes his debut this month as producer, composer and performer on a new series of jazz recordings for the Verve label.

A jazz fan and occasional drummer since he was a kid growing up in the musical hotbed of Philadelphia, Cosby has used ''The Cosby Show'' on NBC-TV to showcase the music in a variety of smooth ways.

Now, the man who plays drums under the nickname Bunions Bradford takes that passion one step deeper with ''Where You Lay Your Head'' and several albums to follow.

''The idea goes all the way back,'' Cosby said in a telephone interview from Las Vegas. ''The love as a listener, as a participant, as a dancer, as a partner. The music has always been that.''

Cosby, one of the world's wealthiest entertainers, is not doing this with any grandiose monetary ambition. It is an artistic compulsion he must follow. ''It is like Miles Davis painting now,'' he says, ''but this is a lot more expensive.

''It is a happy moment to conceptualize music, have it come out right, and to enjoy it. I get the same feeling as reading a script that is funny and can't wait to go to work.

The first album is a collaboration with keyboard players Harold Mabern, Don Pullen and Sonny Bravo, guitarists John Scofield and Sonny Sharrock, saxophonists Odean Pope, Harold Vick and David Murray, and drummers Jack DeJohnette and Al Foster.

Cosby played percussion on three tracks, staying away from the drum kit entirely in the all-star company of Foster and DeJohnette. ''I can't play what I think,'' he said. ''Those drummers are so hot. I'm mostly single stroke.''

All five extended tracks were written by Cosby and his longtime musical partner and co-producer, Stu Gardner. While the lineup of the band shifts, all of the music has a solid rhythmic groove. Cosby draws on the players' adaptability and inndividual strengths or backgrounds in R&B, rock and avant-garde to bring his own musical concept to life.

The first album sounds as if Cosby wants to give some very personal contemporary focus at a time in which jazz is fragmented into countless subcategories. Or perhaps he is trying to bring some substance back to fusion that the jazz/rock/R&B amalgam lost in last two decades.

Mostly, he wants music that listeners can enjoy and dance to (an almost forgotten element in jazz), and that will challenge their imaginations.

As a leader on this session, Cosby was right in the thick of things. He'd hum or sing his melodic ideas, which Gardner would write down for the musicians. Then Cosby would tell each player the kind of sound he was looking for.

''I would give them pictures,'' he said. ''I'd say: 'I want you to think 1950s rock and roll, or sidewalk church music.'''

When it came time to record, he positioned the musicians so they could see each other, set the rhythm, and stayed right in the middle of things as a most unusual conductor. Some of the musicians played notes according to the faces Cosby made.

''When I asked the musicians to take specific approaches, most of the time it was something they enjoyed trying,'' Cosby said. ''To have a guy like David Murray be so happy to come in and adjust the way he is playing was a thrill. I don't think you can recognize at first that it was David, yet it was a fun project for him.''

The strongest and longest cut, at 13:59, is ''Why Is It I Can Never Find Anything In The Closet.'' It is the lone appearance for Pullen and Sharrock.

''Sonny's surprises come at you like fireworks,'' Cosby said. ''These sheets of chords and electricity. It is like a flight at 45,000 feet with turbulence.

''But that cut evolves in its listenability, for lack of a better word. I started with Sonny deliberately coming out in this haunting minor feel, a mild irritation for the listener, then moved from an abstract sound to impressionism.

''Music has to resolve,'' Cosby says. ''There are guys who never let the listener know what they are doing. That's not fair to your audience. The more they understand, the more they will want to come in and listen to you.''

Cosby is considering taking a band out on the road next year, perhaps as a revival of his rarely seen or heard Bunions Bradford Funeral Parlor Marching Band.

''It is going to take at least a good year to prepare. Not for the musicians, but so that people understand what's coming,'' Cosby said. ''I don't want them to be expecting comedy. That's a strong act to follow.''

BY JAN A. ZVERINA

DETROIT (MARCH 5) UPI - Never mind that we've barely begun 1990. As far as Chevrolet is concerned, it's already 1991 and time for the first significantly restyled Caprice sedan in 13 years.

Note the well worn phrase ''all-new'' is not used here, despite the Caprice's windswept body that is longer and wider than before, now making this car look more expensive than many late-model Buicks and Oldsmobiles.

That's because the 1991 Caprice, to go on sale this spring, rides the same full frame chassis used since 1977, although its wheelbase now measures 115.9 inches instead of a full 116.

Also carried over from the previous model is a 5.0 liter V8 engine that delivers 170 horsepower at 4,200 rpm, coupled to a 4-speed automatic transmission and arranged in a rear-drive fashion.

Its rear axle ratio has been changed to a slightly more economical 2.56:1, although a 3.08 ratio is offered. EPA fuel economy estimates range from 17 to 26 mpg.

About the only significant underbody change is the addition of Bosch anti-lock brakes. A driver's side air bag has been installed to meet passive restraint requirements.

Both are standard equipment in all 1991 Caprices, proof that General Motors is serious about widening the use of these safety features to its typical family sedans.

But they also explain why the 1991 Caprice is between $1,470 and $2,265 more than the 1990 model. Prices start at $15,995 for the base Caprice, excluding the $525 destination fee. The posher Caprice Classic begins at $17,370.

Air conditioning and AM-FM stereo are standard as before, although like most large cars, one can easily break the $20,000 mark if one chooses what automakers call a ''preferred equipment'' package.

The Caprice Classic evaluated cost $20,200, its sticker swelled by one such package costing $1,906. It lumped commonly ordered items (electric seats and mirrors, cruise control, cassette stereo and adjustable steering wheel) with less popular ones, like self-actuating headlights and a compass in the rearview mirror.

Other extras: a full-sized spare tire ($128) and rear window defogger ($195).

The Caprice's new shape is almost guaranteed to lower this car's average owner age of 62, while promising to make the slickest taxicab or police car ever seen, since Chevrolet will continue to cater to those markets.

But while its styling marks a radical departure from earlier versions, GM merely followed a path blazed five years before by archrival Ford, which replaced its rather staid mid-sized LTD and Marquis with the highly acclaimed Ford Taurus and Mercury Sable.

In fact the new Caprice sedan resembles the Sable from its center pillar back. That similarity becomes even more apparent in the new Caprice wagon, to go on sale later this year.

The 1991 Caprice retains its status as a true six-passenger sedan, with increased shoulder and hip room and a trunk that is only slightly less spacious, at 20.4 cubic feet.

It also looks and feels roomier because of a larger glass area, sloped hoodline, and a deep dashboard that has a large, legible speedometer flanked by fuel and temperature gauges and a pull-out tray that holds cups and spare change.

However it seems Chevrolet blew most of its restyling budget on the outside, leaving an interior marred by a cheap-feeling steering wheel, squishy seats and a lower dash molded from hard plastic.

On the road, the 3,898-pound Caprice was found to have a smooth and responsive drivetrain under all conditions, and a quieter ride than before thanks to its new body that has been made more rigid.

Two cars were reviewed - one with the base suspension and one with an optional ride/handling package, larger tires and a limited-slip differential, all which added $533 to the sticker.

Those willing to give up some smoothness in ride should consider those extras because they give the Caprice noticeably better stability on curves and over rough pavement.

Chevrolet expects to sell about 200,000 Caprices a year, catering to both traditional and new buyers who are likely to embrace its aerodynamic look.

Maybe even some owners of aging Taurus and Sable sedans will consider this car, although those buyers may already be convinced about the merits of front-drive in a family sedan.

(For each car written about in his weekly Roadtalk column, UPI Auto Writer Jan Zverina test drives the vehicle for one week, driving it between 250 and 500 miles on both city and rural roads.)

(MARCH 5) UPI - Writing is difficult for many people, but a new writing aid for Macintosh computers could make it downright impossible.

Reference Software boasts its new Grammatik Mac writing-improvement program ''will improve your writing in 30 days or your money back.''

Spending 30 days with Grammatik Mac, however, could render users incapable of writing the San Francisco software publisher to request the promised refund.

The program is a mishmash of bells and whistles that calls attention to what it perceives as errors and suggests revisions. But the errors it cites often are not errors, and the revisions it suggests are sometimes inane or, worse erroneous.

An excerpt from a basic reading primer - the old story of Dick and Jane and their dog Spot - stumped Grammatik Mac. The program was tripped up by the sentence: ''Dick and Jane play with Spot.''

''No verb found,'' Grammatik Mac protested. ''This may be an incomplete sentence.''

Wrong.

In another test, it checked the sentence, ''The advice Grammatik Mac gives is hard to accept.''

The program flagged the word ''accept'' and advised:

'''Accept' means to receive: 'Please accept my offer.' 'Except' means to leave out: 'Except the last provision of the contract.'''

Beside the ''Replace With'' button it displayed the word ''effect.'' That is dead wrong.

While the program was only suggesting that ''accept'' might be wrong, it appeared to be recommending the incorrect word. That is not the kind of help a writer unsure of grammar needs.

The program had similar problems with ''affect'' and ''effect,'' and provided equally misleading advice.

It also is inconsistent. It will detect a grammar error in a document, and miss the same error in a copy of that document.

Some errors it will not find at all. It detected nothing wrong with this sentence: ''Programmers work in an office wear people talk strange and where odd clothing.''

Grammatik Mac features an array of eye-catching features - like a chart that compares the readability of your document to the Gettysburg Address, a Hemingway short story and an insurance policy.

It also allows users to customize the comparison chart by replacing the readability statistics for one or more of the three standard documents. You could, for example, substitute a first draft of something you are writing for the insurance policy, then use the comparison feature to track your progress.

Or you could replace the Hemingway story statistics with your company's model sales proposal and check your work against that standard.

Grammatik Mac provides readability statistics on the Flesch Reading Ease scale, the Flesch-Kincaid Grade Level scale and Gunning's Fog Index.

It also provides statistics on the average length of paragraphs, sentences and words - in both letters and syllables - and a plethora of other trivia.

But it fails to accomplish its primary tasks. Its grammar and punctuation checkers are inconsistent, and its spelling checker is cumbersome.

As for style, when fed a passage from Shakespeare - Portia's speech from ''The Merchant of Venice'' about the quality of mercy - Grammatik Mac pronounced it choppy and suggested revision.

Grammatik Mac also is plagued by bugs.

Running under MultiFinder, icons in the Grammatik Mac folder would frequently disappear when I quit the application. When I closed and reopened the folder, they reappeared.

The program also failed to recognize paragraphs - an significant shortcoming, since the number of sentences per paragraphs is one factor used in assessing readability.

Only once could I make it discern paragraphs - and that was when I used it to check the ''Read Me'' file in the Grammatik Mac folder.

It failed in all other attempts, using documents in Macwrite and Microsoft Word 4.0 formats as well as documents created with those word processors and stored as plain text.

The supplemental documentation cautions that Grammatik Mac may not recognize paragraphs unless documents are stored using the ''Save As'' option. I tried using both the Save As and the quick Save options, and in no case could I make the program recognize paragraphs.

Strangely, paragraph marks appeared on the screen when documents were checked in the program's fully interactive mode, but the document statistics file consistently showed the documents as one long paragraph.

Ironically, the program comes with an excellent book on writing by veteran newspaper editor DeWitt H. Scott. Scott's book, ''Secrets of Successful Writing,'' should be standard equipment for anyone who writes.

Grammatik Mac, on the other hand, should be avoided.

Software: Grammatik Mac by Reference Software, 330 Townsend Street, San Francisco, Calif., 94107; System requirements: Mac Plus or greater, two 800k floppy drives or hard disk, System 5.0 or higher; Microsoft Word, MacWrite, MacWrite II, WordPerfect; Write Now or word processor capable of saving documents in text or RTF format; List price: $99. Write protection: no; Reviewers evalutation (on scale of 1 to 5) 0 - (program disks would be better used as coasters).

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Roman Catholic bishops' top spokesman on abortion Monday endorsed a boycott of environmental groups that support changes in U.S. population assistance and birth control policies.

''Such proposals ... do not deserve the support of anyone who wishes to foster respect for all fragile life on our planet, which includes the vulnerable life of the unborn child,'' said Richard Doerflinger, associate director for policy development of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops' Secretariat for Pro-life Activities.

Doerflinger's statement was issued in support of a boycott of three environmental organizations called by the National Right to Life Committee the nation's largest grass-roots anti-abortion organization.

Targets of the boycott are the National Wildlife Federation, the National Audubon Society and the Sierra Club.

At issue in the boycott call are the three groups' support for legislation that would restore U.S. funding for the U.N. Population Fund and efforts to repeal the so-called Mexico City policy, which denies U.S. population funds to any group that includes abortion or abortion counseling as part of the services offerred.

All three groups argue their support of the changes is not an endorsement of abortion but rather support for changes in family assitance aid. Many environmental groups see burgeoning world population as a threat to the environment.

Abortion opponents are fiercely critical of the U.N. agency because it supports China's population control program, which critics, including the State Department, believe involves coerced abortions.

Congress is currently considering legislation that would reverse the Mexico City policy announced by the Reagan administration in 1984. The legislation, which passed both the House and the Senate last year, was vetoed by President Bush despite safeguards that would deny U.S. funds going to China or for any abortion purposes.

The National Wildlife Fund, for example, said it supports renewed contributions to the U.N. agency ''if there is a restriction on the use of those funds to pay for abortions or involuntary sterilization'' and modification of the Mexico City policy ''to assure that U.S. bilateral aid funds continue to be used only for pre-conception family planning purposes.''

But Doerflinger said the ''sole purpose'' of the proposed legislation ''is to require U.S. population programs in developing nations to subsidize abortion-related activity to the same extent as the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision demands domestic programs.''

He called on the targeted environmental groups to ''rethink their priorities'' and encouraged anti-abortion environmentalists ''who contribute to these organizations to make their concerns known.''

The National Right to Life Committee claims it has no position on contraception or family planning but opposes the proposed legislation even with the restrictions on China and abortion-related use of U.S. funds.

The Catholic Church, as a matter of doctrine, opposes all means of birth control using artificial means.

SEREIPHEAP, CAMBODIA (MARCH 5) UPI - Cambodian resistance groups planning to capture three major towns in the western part of the country suffered a setback when Vietnamese combat troops returned to Cambodia five months after their supposed withdrawal, resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk said Monday.

Sihanouk, in an interview at a resistance base near the Thai-Cambodian border, said the Khmer Rouge and two allied non-Communist guerrilla groups had planned to capture the provincial capitals of Battambang, Siem Reap and Sisophon by the end of the year.

The fall of the three towns, particularly Battambang, the second largest city in Cambodia, and Siem Reap, which has the Angkor Wat ruins that are the national symbol, would have been devastating blows to the Vietnamese-backed government.

''Those towns are no longer defended by purely Khmer troops, but by elite Vietnamese special forces,'' Sihanouk told United Press International.

Sihanouk said 10,000 to 20,000 Vietnamese troops had returned to Cambodia in recent months after their official withdrawal last September.

Vietnam has admitted that technicians and advisors are assisting government troops in Cambodia, but has denied that any combat troops have returned since their much publicized withdrawal.

Western diplomats in Bangkok, however, said there was increasing evidence that at least some soldiers had returned to Cambodia.

NAIROBI, KENYA (MARCH 5) UPI - Rebels in northern Ethiopia said Monday they had killed 1,030 government troops in five days of fierce fighting and captured the strategic town of Addis Zemen.

The clandestine radio of the Tigre People's Liberation Front, monitored in Nairobi, said it and its ally, the Ethiopian People's Democratic Movement, had taken the town after a battle fought over 50 miles of ground along the shores of Lake Tana from the town of Bahar Dar to Addis Zemen itself.

There was no government comment on the rebel claim.

The fall of Addis Zemen, 230 miles north of the capital Addis Ababa, would however, mean that the rebels have strengthened its control over the two major roads from the capital to the north.

The government already concedes that it has no access to Tigre province, through which the other major road runs.

Last week, nevertheless, it issued an urgent appeal for international donors to provide trucks to move food into northern areas threatened with major famine this year.

The extreme Marxist Tigre rebels fought for the overthrow of President Mengistu Haile Mariam, also a Marxist, since 1977.

Last week, the Tigre rebels said its forces freed Debre Tabor, 30 miles southeast of Addis Zemen, in a campaign that began in August last year.

The two rebel groups, operating together as the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front have advanced steadily southward from their strongholds in Tigre province since that time, inflicting heavy losses on the Ethiopian government.

SANTIAGO, CHILE (MARCH 5) UPI - On March 11 the presidential sash that President Augusto Pinochet has claimed since a 1973 coup d'etat will be placed on the shoulders of Patricio Aylwin, thus ending South America's last military dictatorship.

With that ceremony, Aylwin, a 71-year-old master politician who was elected in December, will assume the task of consolidating Chile's reborn democracy, but will do so within the restrictions placed into law by the ruling junta and the constitution written by the military. He also must respond to economic and social expectations and try to resolve the sticky issue of human rights violations.

''Our challenge is to demonstrate to the world that we have the capacity to live in liberty with economic stability but with justice for Chile's poorest people,'' said Aylwin.

Perhaps Aylwin's heaviest, most immediate burden is Pinochet. The 74-year-old general has said he will remain as commander of the powerful army to keep vigil over the new democracy.

Pinochet participated in the bloody 1973 coup in which elected Marxist President Salvador Allende died, and consolidated his power in its aftermath. He remained virtually unchallenged as president for 15 years, until October 1988, when he submitted the continuation of his rule to a vote.

Chileans voted ''no'' by 55 percent to 45 percent, and Aylwin, who led the campaign against Pinochet, easily won the ensuing December election.

Aylwin, a lawyer widely respected for his political skills honed by four decades of experience, has asked Pinochet to retire from the army, saying his continued presence in the post is ''not convenient'' for the country.

Pinochet has openly challenged Aylwin's authority by belittling his designated defense minister, Patricio Rojas. He has twice said he will deal only with Aylwin on military matters.

''I am not a subordinate of the minister,'' Pinochet said in mid-February. ''I will reach an understanding with the president.''

Opposition politicians and political scientists suggest Aylwin will wait for Pinochet to make a mistake, such as as issuing a political statement, before attempting to oust him. Or, they say, the army may decide Pinochet's presence is not in the interest of the institution.

Pinochet himself has indicated lately he may not want to serve out the eight years as army commander, perhape for health reasons, and that he will not be a candidate in 1994 elections as some have suggested.

As president, Aylwin will feel Pinochet's influence in more ways than one.

When he takes the oath of office, it will be in a place of Pinochet's choosing - the new congressional building in the port city of Valparaiso, 75 miles west of Santiago.

Under the ruling junta's law, Congress also will sit in session in Valparaiso despite the fact that Santiago has been the seat of government since colonial times.

Aylwin and congress face restrictions on government spending in the first year and are required to appropriate a set minimum budget for the armed forces. He also will not have the power to remove from office the commanders of the armed forces or some officials left over the Pinochet era. Pinochet also has tried to stack the Supreme Court with his appointees.

In its final months, the Pinochet government has also sold a number of state enterprises, including the national airline, LAN Chile, and radio and television channels and a national news service.

The armed forces have assumed control of various properties, including a high-rise government building in Santiago that is being transformed into the new Defense Ministry. The junta dissolved Pinochet's feared secret police and opposition leaders say they suspect most records have been destroyed.

Political scientist Genaro Arriagada, vice president of the opposition Christian Democrat Party, said Pinochet has tried to create ''a military state, autonomous and independent, within a democratic constitutional state and above it.''

''Only an ignorant or lying person could say that a political system so constructed could be classified a democracy,'' he said.

Aylwin must walk a thin line between demands for justice for the human rights violations committed during the administration of the military government and warnings from the military against conducting a witchhunt involving the armed forces. He has said the violations will be investigated but also has left open the possibility of a pardon.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Supreme Court refused Monday to enter a dispute over laws governing oil drilling platforms and other structures on the Outer Continental Shelf.

The justices, without comment, rejected an appeal from Shell Offshore Inc. a division of Shell Oil Co.

Shell objected to how interest payments were calculated on damages awarded to a contract pipefitter who was injured on a platform off the Louisiana coast.

A federal appeals court in Louisiana found Robert Gates was entitled to interest on past and future damages from the time the suit was filed, rather than from the time the judgment was delivered.

The appeals court based its decision on the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, which says off-shore platforms are governed by the laws of states nearest the structures.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals found the OCSLA requires it to follow Louisiana law, which allows ''prejudgment'' interest.

Gates, who receives more interest on his $546,000 damage award because of the appeals court decision, argued against high court review.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Supreme Court refused to enter a dispute Monday involving lawsuits between Iran and U.S. corporations that stemmed from the shah of Iran's fall from power more than a decade ago.

The justices, without comment, rejected an appeal by Gould Inc., the first American company to challenge an award to Iran by the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal in federal court.

The tribunal was created on Jan. 19, 1981, as part of the hostage crisis resolution and was designed to settle claims by U.S. firms against Iran.

Gould contended the Iranian government broke its contracts with the corporation when it stopped paying for military communications equipment during 1978 rioting that led to the overthrow of the Iranian government.

The tribunal ruled in favor of Iran and held Gould liable for $3.6 million and ordered the company to return the equipment to Iran.

At issue was whether an award against a U.S. company can be enforced in federal court. The trial court decided it could be and the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that ruling.

Gould, in seeking high court review, argued that Congress never passed legislation giving federal courts authority to enforce awards of the tribunal.

Lawyers for Iran argued against high court review.

Iranian militants took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, taking 52

Americans hostage, on Nov. 4, 1979.

The hostages were released after 444 days in captivity on Jan. 19, 1981, upon the drafting of the Algiers Accords.

The agreement stipulated in exchange for the hostages, the United States would restore the financial position of Iran as far as possible, would unfreeze Iranian assets in the United States and settle lawsuits in U.S. courts involving Iran through arbitration.

ANALYSIS BY BUD NEWMAN

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., calls them ''The Seven Deadly Sins of Budgeting'' and, by his standard, President Bush is going straight to hell for violating all of them.

The scholarly Hamilton, chairman of Congress's Joint Economic Committee, listed Bush's budget abuses during a recent hearing of the House Budget Committee, which must soon draft its version of a fiscal 1991 budget.

''Let me identify seven sources of inaccuracy and imprudence in the president's budget approach - what I would call 'The Seven Deadly Sins of Budgeting,''' Hamilton said.

First is ''smoke,'' those overly optimistic and unrealistic assumptions about rates of economic growth, inflation and interest rates in Bush's budget.

''They start the process on the wrong foot, distorting everything that follows,'' Hamilton said.

He said the administraton's long-term forecasts ''invariably call for rapid real growth and falling interest rates, with the tantalizing result that the deficit melts away just over the horizon.''

Hamilton's second budget sin is ''mirrors,'' as in smoke and mirrors.

''Mirrors,'' he said, are ''deficit reductions that appear bigger in the fun house mirrors than in technicians's cold calculations.'' Among Bush's mirrors, he said, are Pentagon ''management reforms.''

The third sin is ''pennywise and pound foolish,'' policies ''whose ill effects outweigh the budget savings.'' Hamilton's examples include ''the failure to provide the resources obviously needed for infrastructure investments and for the indebted developinig nations and Eastern Europe.''

Fourth is ''pass the buck,'' which involves shifting the financial burden from the federal government to states and cities by cutting programs like sewage treatment plant construction and public housing modernization.

Fifth is ''cut now, pay later,'' a sin involving ''policies that seem to reduce the deficit now but make it worse in future years.''

Hamilton said the prime culprit is Bush's capital gains tax cut proposal, which congressional studies show ''would result in revenue losses in every year after the first'' in which it would add revenue.

Sixth is ''shell games,'' or policies ''that claim to save money by moving activitiy from one shell to another.'' For example, eliminating indirect subsidies to the Postal Service ''would cut on-budget outlays but raise off-budget outlays by an equal amount'' resulting in artificial savings.

Hamilton's final budget sin is ''non-starters'' - proposals for spending cuts repeatedly submitted by Republican administrations but repeatedly rejected by the Democratic-controlled Congress.

''Together, practices of these Seven Deadly Sins of Budgeting discredit the president's budget document,'' Hamilton testified. ''I believe that only $10 billion of the president's $36 billion of spending reduction and revenue increases (for fiscal 1991) are likely to offer credible and lasting deficit reduction.''

He also questioned Bush's ''no new taxes'' pledge, since Bush's new budget requests $16 billion in revenue increases and he accepted $5.7 billion in new revenue last year.

''Slogans aside, we are raising taxes,'' Hamilton said. ''But by requiring that it be done in hiding, we are insuring that it will be done badly.''

Hamilton proposed ''a balanced package of spending cuts for lower priority functions and moderate tax increases'' to obtain honest deficit reduction that would restore credibility with the public.

''We must somehow create an airtight package - one that we can't wiggle out of,'' he said. ''We will have to put ourselves on record and on the spot with the public. ... We will need to craft that mechanism so that it does not reward accounting games as the current process does.''

After listening to Hamilton's sins list, House Budget Committee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif., said he wasn't sure his panel could avoid all seven sins in the budget it drafts.

''I don't think we'll get to heaven but maybe we'll end up in purgatory,'' Panetta said.

For the president, however, making it to budget purgatory would be a long, uphill climb from where he is now.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Supreme Court refused Monday to enter a dispute involving import duties imposed on Mexican-produced cement following findings that the companies were subsidized.

The court refused to hear the case brought by six Mexican companies that manufacture and export cement seeking review of an appeals court ruling.

At issue was whether international agreements entered into by Mexico in 1985 and 1986 could be applied retroactively to goods that were exported to the United States in 1983 and 1984.

The Commerce Department had ruled that the cement companies received government subsidies and imposed duties on products sent to the United States. Commerce had made no determination on whether U.S. companies were injured by the imports.

The later international agreements required such a determination before imposing sanctions and the affected cement companies sought a reversal of the earlier sanctions.

Courts, however, ruled against applying the agreements retroactively.

MANILA, PHILIPPINES (MARCH 5) UPI - State lawyers urged the Supreme Court Monday to uphold charges against an opposition leader accused of plotting to oust President Corazon Aquino last December, warning dismissal of the case would be an ''authorization to barbarism.''

The lawyers' request was in response to opposition leader Juan Ponce Enrile's plea to the high tribunal Wednesday to declare as invalid the government charge of rebellion with murder, saying a 1956 ruling declared the merging of the two crimes illegal.

Enrile, 66, who was arrested and detained a week ago, contended that a simple case of rebellion should have been filed against him.

A conviction on rebellion charges carries a maximum of 12 years' imprisonment. The penalty for rebellion with murder is life in prison.

Included in the lawyers' written request to uphold charges against Enrile was a government memo declaring it was time the Supreme Court reviewed its 1956 decision on the merging of the two crimes. The memo also urged tougher penalties for all forms of rebellion.

Rebellion ''is an authorization to barbarism, a declaration of open season for mayhem,'' the document said. ''If rebellion is given a very light penalty because complexing it with common crimes is pariah, it may mean in practical effect the warranty for every conceivable human evil usually committed in war.''

Enrile, a former defense minister who helped oust the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos in a popular uprising in 1986, was scheduled to argue his case before the Supreme Court Tuesday.

Six others were charged with Enrile, a Harvard-trained lawyer, in the Dec. 1-9 coup attempt that claimed at least 119 lives and wounded more than 500 people. The uprising was the sixth and bloodiest during Aquino's presidency.

On Sunday, Cagayan Gov. Rodolfo Aguinaldo attacked the provincial capital of Tuguegarao, 220 miles north of Manila, triggering gun battles that left armed forces civil relations chief Brig. Gen. Oscar Florendo and 19 others dead.

Crack troops were deployed in Cagayan to track down Aguinaldo, 41, a former constabulary colonel who abandoned his men Sunday evening. The military said 249 of Aguinaldo's 300 tribesmen, civilian volunteers and defectors had surrendered.

Aquino said Monday she had ordered the armed forces to arrest Aguinaldo, ''using such force as is necessary, but taking all feasible measures for the safety of civilians.''

Local Governments Secretary Luis Santos said in Tuguegarao that two former judges and four mayors were being investigated for rebellion for supporting Aguinaldo.

In a statement sent to news agencies, leaders of the December mutiny expressed ''solidarity and full support'' for Aguinaldo, whose actions

Sunday were widely condemned in editorials in major newspapers in Manila Monday.

TOKYO (MARCH 5) UPI - Japanese automakers have started marketing mini-vehicles with upgraded standards, bolstering prospects for recovery of the minicar market, industry sources said Monday.

Mitsubishi Motors Corp., Mazda Motor Co. and Suzuki Motor Co. introduced new mini-vehicle models this month while their competitors, including Honda, said they will join the market later this month. Their moves followed the introduction of new standards for mini-vehicles in January.

Under the new specifications, the engine capacity for mini-vehicles was raised to 660 cc from the previous 550 cc and the overall length was extended to 10.8 feet from 10.5 feet.

"We anticipate strong recovery in demand for mini-vehicles this year because many customers have refrained from purchasing such vehicles ahead of the introduction of vehicles with the new standards," said a spokesman for Mitsubishi Motors Corp. "The number of customers purchasing mini-vehicles has been on the increase, particularly in urban areas, mainly because of parking problems," he said.

The car tax on mini-vehicles also is low, ranging from $27 to $48 per year compared with $263 for cars over 1,000 cc engine capacity. The acquisition tax on mini-vehicles was lowered to the uniform 3.0 percent from 5.5 percent to 15.5 percent in April last year when the government introduced Japan's first sales tax.

Automaker executives have predicted domestic sales of mini-vehicles in 1990 will exceed a record high of 1.75 million units set in 1988. The Japan Mini-vehicles Dealers' Association said sales of mini-cars and commercial vehicles in February fell 22.5 percent from a year ago to 111,586 units, marking the 11th straight year-to-year fall.

Association officials, however, said the decrease was attributable largely to customers' restraint on purchase ahead of the introduction of vehicles meeting the new standards.

They said sales of mini passenger cars nearly trebled to 43,617 units because the acquisition tax declined to 3.0 percent from the previous 15.5 percent.

Sales of mini-trucks, which were tax free before last April, plummeted 47.6 percent to 67,962 units. The acquisition tax on the commercial mini-vehicles was lowered from 5.5 percent to 3.0 percent.

JERUSALEM (MARCH 5) UPI - Prominent West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians said Monday the PLO must play a central role in the Middle East peace process, an approach rejected by Likud Party leaders who are deliberating a U.S. peace proposal.

Cabinet ministers representing the Likud were scheduled to meet later Monday to discuss a U.S. compromise on forming a Palestinian delegation to proposed Israeli-Palestinian talks.

Despite the heavy pressure from the Labor Party and the United States, it was not clear the ministers would come to a decision at the meeting.

Thirty prominent Palestinians from the occupied territories, including several mentioned as possible negotiating partners, released a statement that said the Palestine Liberation Organization must select the Palestinian delegation to Israeli-Palestinian talks.

''No Palestinian from the Israeli-occupied territories will participate in any delegation that is not formed or announced by the PLO,'' the statement said.

Under a plan worked out by Egypt and the United States, Egypt would announce the members of the Palestinian delegation. The Likud rejects any role for the PLO, which it calls a terrorist organization, in the peace process.

At the scheduled Likud meeting, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir was expected to give his view of the U.S. proposal, which is aimed at overcoming reservations about Palestinian deportees and East Jerusalem Arabs in the peace process.

Shamir has said he will not be rushed into making a decision. The prime minister's office has denied Israeli media reports that Shamir is likely to accept the proposal. Likud ministers fear the PLO will enter the negotiations.

''I understand (the position of) those like myself who have not decided,'' Environment Minister Roni Mili told Israel Radio. ''We think that the participation of East Jerusalem Arabs has implications with regard to the future (status) of Jerusalem.''

Meanwhile, differences widened between Labor leaders, Finance Minister Shimon Peres and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin over a deadline for a Likud response.

Peres wants a decision by Wednesday while Rabin is willing to wait until next week. Labor has threatened to leave the coalition government unless there is progress in the peace process.

''If by Thursday or next Monday a decision is not made, we need to come to a conclusion whether there is a reason for the government to continue to exist,'' Rabin told Israel Radio.

Also Monday, Likud outrage increased over remarks made by President Bush on East Jerusalem, influencing the discussion about the peace process. On Saturday, Bush said he was opposed to new Jewish settlements ''in the West Bank or in East Jerusalem.''

Since the 1967 Six Day War, large Jewish neighborhoods have been built in what was formerly Jordanian territory in East Jerusalem. Most Israelis do not consider such neighorhoods to be part of the occupied West Bank.

''There are some people who are talking about settlements in Jerusalem, who are calling the big suburbs of Gilo, Ramot, Ramat Eshkol ... settlements. For us they are a part of Jerusalem,'' Shamir told reporters Sunday.

The U.S. compromise to help convene Israeli-Palestinian talks calls for Palestinian delegates to be selected by name rather than category, such as deportees.

After Israelis approval, the next step will be a three-way meeting of Israeli and Egyptian foreign ministers with Secretary of State James Baker to discuss the start of an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue.

The talks will focus on arrangements for elections in the occupied territories. In the elections, Palestinians will select representatives to negotiations on a transition period of limited self-rule that will be followed in three years by talks on a final arrangement.

ROME (MARCH 5) UPI - Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti left Monday for a three-day official visit to the United States to be followed by visits to the Dominican Republic, Chile, Argentina and Brazil.

Both U.S. and Italian officials have said Andreotti's talks in Washington will center mainly on vast changes on the European scene caused by the political upheaval in Eastern Europe, especially political and economic aspects of the planned reunification of East and West Germany.

Andreotti, accompanied by Foreign Minister Gianni De Michelis, left aboard a scheduled flight of the Italian state-run airline Alitalia en route to New York and then Washington.

The official visit to the United States is at the invitation of President Bush and Andreotti is scheduled to meet Bush in the White House Tuesday before meeting with Secretary of State James Baker.

Andreotti also will receive an honorary law dagree from the Catholic University of America in Washington, before he goes to New York to receive similar degrees from New York University and the Jewish Theological Seminary on Thursday.

It is the 70-year-old Christian Democrat Andreotti's first visit to the United States since he became prime minister for the sixth time in July. But as Italy's most experienced politician he has made many previous visits to Washington, including during his five previous spells as prime minister between 1972 and 1979.

Andreotti's five-party coalition of Christian Demorcrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals - Italy's 49th government since World War II - has been shaky in recent weeks due to internal divisions, including a split in his Christian Democrat Party.

But his authority as an international statesman is virtually unparalleled in Western Europe.

On July 1, Italy will assume the rotating six-month presidency of the 12-nation European Community and will have a strong impact on the buildup to the Single Market scheduled to go into effect on Jan. 1, 1993.

Another major topic of Andreotti's talks with U.S. leaders will be the future of the NATO alliance, which is expected to be transformed eventually from a military force to a political organization, Italian officials said. The talks will include a review of U.S. military forces based in Italy.

In the second part of his 11-day tour, Andreotti will visit Santo Domingo, capital of the Dominican Republic Friday, then Chile March 11-12, Argentina March 13-14 and Brazil March 15.

In Chile and Brazil, Andreotti will attend the inaugural ceremonies of new Presidents Patricio Aylwin in Chile and Ferdinando Collor De Mello in Brazil. In all three South American countries he will review the progress of extensive economic accords signed since 1987 covering Italian aid and investment to help stabilize the fledgling democracies.

PHOENIX (MARCH 5) UPI - Developer Charles H Keating Jr., head of the bankrupt American Continental Corp., and the subject of numerous lawsuits and criminal probes, has cut his salary to $1 a year, the Arizona Republic reported Monday.

Records filed last week in the company's Chapter 11 bankruptcy case showed that Keating had carried through with a promise made last year to reduce his $400,000 annual salary to a token $1, the newspaper said.

Keating had said in a national television broadcast in January that he and his family were "flat broke." He said his family had been ruined in part because of heavy investments in the company.

Federal officials and investors in American Continental have filed fraud and racketeering suits totaling more than $1.3 billion against Keating and other American Continental officials.

Keating and other company officers reduced their salaries at the request of the committee of unsecured creditors in the American Continental bankruptcy.

Along with Keating's paycut, the bankruptcy records also showed that Keating's son, Charles H Keating III, and his son-in-law, Robert Hubbard Jr., have been taken off the payroll. The younger Keating, an executive vice president, and Butler, a vice president, both had been receiving $250,000 annually as of last April.

The Republic said federal investigators are trying to determine if Charles Keating Jr. and other company executives may be drawing salaries from at least eight American Continental subsidiaries which are not covered by the bankruptcy proceedings.

Ronald Warnicke, a court-appointed examiner in the bankruptcy case, was expected to submit a report about the finances of the subsidiaries March 21 to U.S. District Court Judge Richard Bilby. Shortly after that, Bilby is to decide whether to replace Keating's management with a trustee to run American Continental.

American Continental filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy on April 13. A day later, the federal government seized American Continental's Lincoln Savings and Loan Association of Irvine, Calif.

According to the bankruptcy filing, American Continental's six top executives were being paid a total of $1.8 million a year. The new documents showed only four executives were being paid half that amount. They include president Judy Wischer, $350,000; senior vice president Robert Wurzelbacher Jr. $250,000 and financial vice president Andrew Ligget $300,000.

The financial records also showed that American Continental was paying huge amounts in monthly legal fees. The expenses peaked in December at $1.67 million and totaled $814,137 in January. The report indicates the company is paying five law firms and an accountant in the Chapter 11 case as well as the company's fight with federal regulators over Lincoln Savings.

The report showed American Continental's assets totaled $109.8 million in January, down from $155.3 million at the time of the bankruptcy filing.

BEIRUT, LEBANON (MARCH 5) UPI - Rival Christian forces Monday began to dismantle mines from the battlefronts in east Beirut as mediators worked for an agreement that would prevent a recurrence of violence, Christian security sources said.

The sources said troops loyal to Gen. Michel Aoun and Lebanese Forces militiamen of Samir Geagea were removing obstacles and sand barricades from the streets in Dora and Sin El Fil. Roads were reopened as conditions were returning to normal, the sources said.

Mediators have been working around the clock to narrow differences between Aoun and Geagea and negotiate a settlement to the 5-week-old conflict.

Sources close to the mediation panel said talks were under way to form a joint committee that would include Aoun, Geagea and other Christian figures to deal with affairs in the Christian enclave.

But the sources said they feared whether the mediators would be successful if Aoun insisted on forming a ''joint military operation room'' under his command, a condition that Geagea strongly rejects.

Christian security sources said Aoun has proved incapable of scoring a victory against Geagea's militiamen and ousting them from east Beirut as he had promised.

Aoun's forces on Thursday launched a wide-scale offensive against militia positions in Ashrafiyeh, Dora and Karantina but failed to advance at any of those axes.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - One of the teenagers indicted for attacks on joggers during a rampage through Central Park has been arrested for possessing 43 bags of the drug ''angel dust'' with intent to sell, police said Monday.

Michael Briscoe, 18, and another youth were arrested during a buy-and-bust operation Sunday afternoon.

The apartment is known for ''heavy traffic in PCP, commonly known as angel dust,'' said police spokesman Ralph St. Just.

Briscoe and the second youth, Chevar Hall, 18, were found with 43 bags of the drug, St. Just said.

Each was charged with two counts of fifth-degree criminal possession of a controlled substance with intent to sell. If convicted, the maximum penalty is seven years in prison.

Briscoe was indicted for an attack on teacher John Loughlin who was bashed in the head as he jogged in Central Park last April. He was not accused in the rape and attempted murder of a woman jogger.

At the time of his arrest for the Central Park assault, Briscoe was on probation for robbery of a 14-year-old boy. He was freed on $5,000 cash bail on the assault charge and $1 for violation of probation. His bail was put up by the Rev. Al Sharpton.

Briscoe was among seven youths indicted in the two-hour ''wilding'' incident through a moonlit Central Park. All the others were indicted for attacks on men joggers and the woman jogger. Their criminal trials were expected to begin next month.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Former national security adviser John Poindexter watched and listened intently Monday as a judge began questioning the first of more than 200 potential jurors for an Iran-Contra trial expected to feature videotaped testimony from former President Ronald Reagan.

U.S. District Judge Harold Greene began the proceedings by greeting the audience in the crowded courtroom. Poindexter slid back in a leather-padded swivel chair and watched as potential jurors were questioned.

Poindexter, who was Reagan's national security adviser in the mid-1980s, is standing trial on five criminal charges, including accusations that he obstructed congressional inquiries and made false statements to Congress.

He is the highest ranking Reagan administration official to stand trial in the foreign policy and political debacle that seriously marred Reagan's second term.

Greene said 206 potential jurors had answered a series of written questions before the opening day of the trial. Of the 206 people, Greene said, 76 noted that they had seen, heard or read Poindexter's earlier congressional testimony - delivered under a grant of immunity - about the Iran-Contra scandal.

Greene said those 76 people would be ''set aside'' for now and questioned extensively later to determine if they have been ''tainted'' by exposure to the congressional testimony in the summer of 1987.

Meanwhile, Greene said, an initial group of 50 potential jurors had been assembled for questioning Monday.

Twelve jurors and six alternates must be chosen before testimony can begin. Greene told several potential jurors that he expected the trial to last about six weeks.

The Iran-Contra scandal involved the secret sale of weapons to Iran in an effort to win freedom for U.S. hostages in Lebanon and the diversion of money from the weapons sales to aid the Contra rebels in Nicaragua when Congress had banned such military assistance.

The first potential juror questioned was an unemployed woman who said she had no opinion about Reagan, knew nothing about the Poindexter case, and liked to watch television comedy and game shows.

She said she only read the local news portion of the daily newspaper. Greene ruled her qualified to hear the case.

The second potential juror was a young woman who practices real estate law and who knows a lawyer on Poindexter's trial team - he babysat her when she was a toddler in Virginia Beach, Va.

She graduated from law school in 1986 and also was interviewed by the same lawyer when she applied for admittance to law school. The lawyer was a family friend when she was a child.

The woman also said she worked as a volunteer in President Bush's election campaign but could be an impartial juror even though she generally recalled some news coverage about the Iran-Contra scandal.

Dan Webb, the former U.S. attorney from Chicago who is prosecuting Poindexter, asked Greene to dismiss the woman from the jury. Poindexter's lawyer, Richard Beckler, disagreed, noting she told the judge she could be fair. Greene found her qualified for the jury.

The third potential juror who was questioned said she remembered hearing a television news broadcast about Reagan, who recently recorded his testimony in Los Angeles for use at the trial.

Asked what she recalled about the broadcast, the woman said of Reagan: ''He said he couldn't remember anything.'' Her comment brought laughter to the courtroom.

Questioned further, she said she had heard Poindexter's name on television and, ''They said he was part of it'' - referring to the Iran-Contra scandal.

Beckler asked that she be dismissed because of limited press exposure, but Greene declined.

''I find her qualified,'' the judge said.

Before the judge ordered a lunch break, eight potential jurors were questioned and seven were found qualified. All are women.

One potential juror was dismissed by Greene because she hedged her answers when questioned about her ability to be fair and impartial.

The most colorful potential juror from the morning session was an elderly woman who has been a janitor for 22 years. ''I'm a fair person,'' she said firmly. She had served as a juror in a murder case eight years ago and found the defendant innocent.

''If I believe in something, can't nobody change my mind,'' she said.

Before recessing for lunch, Greene noted with some pleasure, ''We're making more progress than I anticipated.''

Poindexter's trial is the first Iran-Contra case expected to contain testimony from Reagan. Poindexter finally obtained Reagan's testimony on the strength of arguments that he reported daily and directly to the former president.

Reagan spent about eight hours testifying on videotape on Feb. 16 and 17 and Poindexter's lawyers are expected to argue that Reagan gave overall policy guidance to Poindexter on Iran-Contra matters.

Poindexter was Reagan's national security adviser from December 1985 until he resigned in November 1986 as the scandal became public.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The House Intelligence Committee began a preliminary investigation Monday into reported links between the CIA and several failed savings and loan institutions, the panel's staff director said.

''We will be looking into it,'' Dan Childs, staff director for the Intelligence Committee, said of the allegations, which surfaced last month in articles in the Houston Post. The stories alleged that the CIA was engaged in fraud at some savings and loans to help fund its covert activities.

A CIA spokesman last week said the charges were ''without foundation'' and promised to cooperate with the committee's investigation.

Childs said Intelligence Committee staff workers began looking into the matter Monday. He said he did not know how long it would take before a decision is made on whether the committee would begin a formal investigation.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of a House panel overseeing financial institutions, asked last week that the Intelligence Committee conduct the investigation after CIA officials refused to appear before Annunzio's subcommittee, even in closed-door session.

Annunzio said the CIA declined on grounds that the House Intelligence Committee has sole oversight authority for the spy agency. So Annunzio asked Intelligence Committee Chairman Anthony Beilenson, D-Calif., to look into the matter.

Childs said Intelligence Committee staff workers will talk to Annunzio's staff to see what they learned from their own limited inquiries.

In his letter to Beilenson last week, Annunzio said a former Justice Department prosecutor had told a House Banking subcommittee staff member that while looking into a thrift failure ''he was told by FBI agents to drop the investigation of one of the individuals connected with the bank failure because that individual had 'CIA connections.'''

''The prosecutor was also told that the individual involved had a 'get out of jail free card,''' Annunzio wrote to Beilenson. ''If these charges are true, then appropriate action must be taken against the CIA. I know of no 'get out of jail free card' that applies to the CIA. No agency is above the law.''

Annunzio also said that during his panel's preliminary inquiry, staff members interviewed an FBI agent who said the former prosecutor's comments were correct and that statements about CIA connections were made in his presence.

CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield said last week the agency ''will fully cooperate with the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence in any investigation the committee might choose to conduct concerning the Houston Post allegations.''

''We will repond in a way that we believe will satisfy the committee that the allegations that CIA was involved in S&L fraud to help covert operations are without foundation,'' Mansfield said.

Mansfield would neither confirm nor deny the allegation that FBI agents stopped a Justice Department prosecutor from investigating one individual linked to a failed thrift because that person allegedly had CIA connections.

''We will be happy to respond to the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence if they pose that question,'' Mansfield said.

QUETTA, PAKISTAN (MARCH 5) UPI - A strong earthquake rocked western Pakistan Monday, killing at least five people, injuring dozens of others and causing houses to collapse in several villages, officials and hospital sources said.

The quake was centered in the village of Dashtgoram, about 90 miles southwest of the Baluchistan Province capital of Quetta, officials said.

They said the temblor hit at about 2 a.m. Monday and measured 6 on the open-ended Richter scale. They said a strong aftershock was felt in the same area at about 10:45 a.m.

Hospital sources said five people died and dozens were injured when their mud homes collapsed in Dashtgoram and surrounding villages. Hundreds were left homeless, officials said.

In Quetta, people ran out of their homes in panic at the onset of the quake, the second temblor to hit the area in five days.

A quake measuring 7.5 on the Richter scale struck Quetta in 1935, killing about 50,000 people.

DETROIT (MARCH 5) UPI - General Motors Corp. was expected to announce Monday its Board of Directors has adopted a policy banning "greenmail," or the buyout of a company shareholders for more than the fair market price.

The expected announcement was hailed as a victory by corporate gadfly Evelyn Y. Davis, an eccentric shareholder who has been pressuring GM since 1987 to ban such payments after it bought out its largest single shareholder and board member H. Ross Perot in 1986 for nearly $750 million.

"I am very pleased," Davis told United Press International in a telephone interview from New York. "I think (GM Chairman) Roger Smith wanted to do something right before he retires (this July)."

Davis, editor of Highlights and Lowlights, a gossipy Washington, D.C., newsletter sent to top corporate executives, holds about 150 shares of various GM stock.

Davis said Smith called her one week ago to tell her the board had planned to officially adopt in its bylaws the policy if she would drop her resolution, which was to be presented for the fourth year in a row at the carmaker's annual meeting in Detroit May 25.

"The resolution vote was getting embarrassingly high for General Motors," Davis said. "I had institutional support and the vote was going to be even bigger this year.

In 1989, nearly 28 percent of the voting shareholders sided with Davis. "Getting just three percent of the vote (for a shareholder proposal) is unusually high." A proposal must receive 51 percent of a vote to be adopted, GM spokesman William Winters said.

Davis is now considering mounting a new assault on the GM Board Room. "Maybe for next year, I am thinking about getting General Motors to divulge the names and positions of executives who make more than $100,000 a year," she said. "But this is just the beginning of March and I don't know what will happen by the end of next May."

This May, Davis promises to entertain or annoy shareholders in Detroit with her opinion on the movie "Roger & Me," which provides a bittersweet look at how the city of Flint, Mich., tries to cope with economic realities after a series of massive autoworker layoffs by GM.

"This 'Roger & Me' movie smacks of socialism," Davis said, adding that "General Motors does not owe people a living. "This is ridiculous," she said. "You ain't going to get rich and famous in Flint, so you might as well leave early."

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Republican National Committee Chairman Lee Atwater fainted Monday while addressing a fund-raiser for Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, but recovered immediately and even joked as he was rushed to a hospital, an RNC spokeswoman said Monday.

RNC spokeswoman Leslie Goodman said the 39-year-old Atwater fainted midway through his speech to Gramm supporters. Doctors at the event rushed to his aid and he ''recovered immediately,'' Goodman said.

''He was joking as they took him out in a stretcher to the ambulance,'' Goodman said.

Atwater entered George Washington University Hospital at 10:05 a.m. and was to remain there for testing. The RNC chairman's schedule for the day was cancelled, including a mid-afternoon appearance before the National Association of Home Buiders with Democratic National Committee Chairman Ron Brown. Goodman was unable to say how long Atwater would remain in the hospital or when he would return to his regular schedule.

''We'll just take it one day at a time,'' Goodman said. ''As soon as we have a doctor's report we'll have more details.''

Goodman said reports that Atwater had been on a liquid diet were false.

Gramm spokesman Larry Neal said Atwater ''had spoken for about 10 minutes at the podium when he apparently passed out. He was attended by two doctors in the audience until the paramedics arrived.''

Neal said about 110 people were in the audience and to his knowledge Atwater had not complained of feeling sick or given any other signs before passing out.

A federal official said Atwater recovered at the hospital and ''appeared to be doing fine.''

Atwater was unanimously elected chairman of the Republican National Committee in January 1989 after serving as manager of the Bush-Quayle campaign.

Born in Atlanta, Ga., Atwater grew up in South Carolina and began his political career as an aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

In 1974, he formed his own political consulting firm and in 1978, he served as political director for Thurmond's re-election campaign.

Atwater managed Ronald Reagan's 1980 primary campaign in South Carolina where Reagan beat his opponent by 25 percentage points.

During the fall campaign in 1980, Atwater was promoted to regional political director for the Reagan-Bush campaign, overseeing Republican efforts in four Southern states. He also served as campaign consultant for several successful congressional races.

After Reagan's election, Atwater was appointed special assistant to the president for political affairs, where he served until joining the Reagan-Bush 1984 re-election campaign as deputy campaign director and political director.

In 1986 Atwater became chairman of the Fund for America's Future, which was Vice President George Bush's multi-candidate political action committee. Atwater resigned from the fund to become manager of the George Bush for President Committee in February 1987.

NEW STANTON, PA (MARCH 5) UPI - Representatives of the United Auto Workers union are negotiating a new contract for the 33-member skeleton crew that remains at the former Volkswagen of America assembly plant in Westmoreland County, union officers said.

The workers are assisting about 60 Chinese workers from the First Auto Works of Chang Chung in northern China, UAW Local 2055 President Ken Prevenslik said Sunday. The Chinese company last summer bought VW's equipment and has had a crew working at the East Huntingdon Township plant choosing, dismantling and packaging parts for shipment.

The equipment, mostly robotics and automated machinery, is scheduled to be "on the boat in the harbor" of Philadelphia by June 15, said Prevenslik, who did not think the contract talks would delay the equipment being shipped. "It is not a deadline for our employees in the plant," he said. "There's going to be a cleanup effort. I expect them to be there a couple more months."

One negotiating session has been held and bargaining is scheduled to resume March 13 in Detroit, Prevenslik said. The contract is being negotiated to make sure the workers are "afforded the same benefits as the people who have left," said Prevenslik.

There also are 12 Volkswagen salaried employees and 12 security guards working at the plant, Prevenslik said. Only four UAW members will be working at the facility by October, he said. At that time, decertification of Local 255 or joining another UAW local most likely will occur, said Prevenslik.

"It's inevitable at some point that that will happen," said Prevenslik of decertification. "We're looking at going down to four employees. It's very difficult for four to maintain their own union."

Local 255 reached its peak membership of about 5,000 during 1981-82. In addition to the 33 workers at the Volkswagen plant, the local also has as members 30 former VW workers who have maintained their membership and 120 retirees.

The plant, which once manufactured Rabbits, Jettas, and GTI models, stopped producing cars in July 1988. When the plant closed, it had 2,450 blue- and white-collar employees.

State officials, including Gov. Robert P. Casey, have been trying to lure other companies to the VW plant. Among firms that have vistited the site is Sony Corp., which wants to build a television manufacturing plant in the United States.

PARIS (MARCH 5) UPI - French National Assembly President Laurent Fabius gave his Czechoslovak counterpart, Alexandre Dubcek, a warm welcome Monday describing the Prague Spring leader as a ''symbol of liberty.''

Dubcek arrived in Paris Sunday for a two-day visit at the invitation of the Socialist Fabius. The high point of Dubcek's trip Monday was to be an audience with President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace to discuss the changing face of Eastern Europe, aides said.

Fabius welcomed Dubcek for lunch at his Hotel de Lassay residence and said he was particularly moved to meet him.

''Certainly all official visits are important. But some are more moving than others,'' he said in a speech. Fabius paid tribute to Dubcek as ''the one who refused to lower the flag, a symbol of liberty, a man of courage.''

Dubcek for his part praised the positive influence of Mitterrand during a visit the French leader made to Prague in December 1988 on the 20th anniversary of the Soviet invasion.

''That was an encouragement for us, a moral reinforcement. We could hold up our heads.'' Mitterrand met with several dissidents during the visit.

Earlier Dubcek placed a wreath on the monument at Pere-Lachaise Cemetery to the Czech and Slovak soldiers who died in the French Army during World War I and on another monument to victims of Matthausen cemetery.

Dubcek was to conclude the day over dinner with Michel Vauzelle, president of the foreign affairs commission in the National Assembly.

Dubcek is accompanied on the trip by Jiri Hajek, his foreign minister until the Soviet invasion in 1968.

On Tuesday Dubcek meets Prime Minister Michel Rocard and Foreign Minister Roland Dumas.

Dubcek began his first ever visit to Paris Sunday by touring the Orsay Museum, the Louvre and the Eiffel Tower and taking a ride on a river boat up the Seine.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Andy Rooney returned to ''60 Minutes'' Sunday night and the show racked up more than twice the ratings score of the combined ABC-NBC opposition, according to the 23-market overnight ratings released Monday.

Rooney was suspended without pay Feb. 8 from his $800,000-a-year job as commentator for alleged remarks about blacks. Homosexual organizations also criticized him for remarks he made in a Dec. 28 commentary.

On his return to the show Sunday, Rooney defended his record of supporting racial justice and said he regretted making any remarks that offended homosexuals.

In addition to the return of Rooney, ''60 Minutes'' did not have to compete with ABC's ''America's Funniest Home Videos'' as it did the previous week.

''60 Minutes'' had a 22.7 rating and a 36 share in the overnights, compared to a 9.6 rating and a 15 share for ABC's ''Life Goes On,'' and an 8.5 rating and a 14 share for NBC's ''Magical World of Disney.

In the full ratings for the previous week, the A.C. Nielsen Co. reported that a special hourlong airing of ''Videos,'' a repeat of its opening show scored a 19.4 rating and a 31 share. ''60 Minutes'' without Andy Rooney had a 16.7 rating and a 27 share.

The Nielsen overnights provide a preliminary indication of viewing by measuring viewing in 23 large markets.

Each ratings point represents about 921,000 households and a share is the percentage of TV sets tuned to a particular show.

SRINAGAR, INDIA (MARCH 5) UPI - At least six people died in pro-secession violence in the Kashmir Valley Monday, including three bystanders caught in a cross fire between militant separatists and security forces, police and intelligence sources said.

Most of the trouble occurred during brief relaxations in the curfew clamped on the Kashmir Valley Friday, a day after troops killed at least 60 pro-independence demonstrators.

Police said the most serious incident of the day occurred at 6:30 a.m. in the Lal Chowk district of Srinagar, 400 miles north of New Delhi, when militants wielding automatic weapons opened fire on a truck carrying Border Security Force personnel on routine patrol.

The ambush sparked an exchange of gunfire that killed three bystanders and injured four security force personnel, according to police and intelligence sources.

A few minutes later, shooting erupted in another part of town after militants opened fire on a security force checkpoint. Police said there were no casualties but witnesses said at least two security force personnel sustained injuries.

In four other encounters at separate locations in Srinagar, militants fired on Central Reserve Police Force personnel, provoking brief exchanges of gunfire but causing no injuries, police said.

Later in the day, two people were killed and two others were injured when security forces fired on about 9,000 slogan-shouting demonstrators during a curfew break at Bandipore, 25 miles west of Srinagar, police sources said.

Further details concerning the incident was not immediately available.

Meanwhile, the body of a suspected police informant was discovered early Monday in the village of Uri, about 50 miles west of Srinagar, police sources said.

Police sources said the victim had been hanged and that an underground militant group called the Hizbul Mujaheedin had claimed responsibility.

Moslem militants have been waging a bloody campaign for Kashmir's secession from India for the past two years. However, a full-scale insurrection supported by virtually all of the region's 3 million Moslems erupted Jan. 20 when security forces opened fire on Moslem pro-secession demonstrators.

Since then, more than 160 people have died, mostly demonstrators shot by security and paramilitary forces.

Separatists claim an independent Kashmir is necessary because the collective interests of Kashmiris have been consistently ignored by the Hindu-dominated central government.

Their main complaint, however, is that India never fulfilled a 1949 promise to hold a plebiscite so Kashmiris could decide if they want to remain a part of India, join neighboring Islamic Pakistan or become independent.

Both India and Pakistan claim sovereignty over Kashmir, with India controlling two-thirds of the region.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The McDonnell Douglas Corp., maker of the F-18 Hornet, the F-15 Eagle and the AV-8 Harrier jump jet, received $8.6 billion in defense contracts last year, the most of all U.S. companies, the Defense Department said Monday.

McDonnell Douglas, which also helps make the Tomahawk and Harpoon missile systems and is developing the C-17 cargo plane, had been ranked the No. 1 defense contractor in the previous year as well, with $8 billion in awards.

In the second spot in 1989 for the second straight year was General Dynamics Corp., with $7 billion in contracts. General Dynamics makes the F-16 Falcon fighter, nuclear submarines, the M-1 Abrams tank, and helps make the Tomahawk, Stinger, RIM-66 Standard and Sparrow missile systems.

It was followed by General Electric Co. with $5.8 billion in contract awards, Raytheon Co. with $3.8 billion, and General Motors Corp. with $3.7 billion.

Rounding out the top 10 were Lockheed Corp. with $3.7 billion, United Technologies Corp. with $3.6 billion, Martin Marietta Corp. with $3.3 billion, The Boeing Co. with $2.9 billion and Grumman Corp. with $2.4 billion.

JERUSALEM (MARCH 5) UPI - A recent immigrant from Yugoslavia was found guilty Monday of spying for the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel Radio reported.

Victoria David, 34, pleaded guilty to charges of giving information to the enemy, making contact with an illegal organization, and membership in an illegal organization, the radio reported.

Under Israeli law, the PLO is considered an illegal organization and contacts with the group are forbidden.

David and another Yugoslavian woman, Pritazia Kanzevitch, 25, allegedly photographed army bases and other strategic locations in Israel and passed the pictures on to a PLO representative in Yugoslavia, the radio reported.

Kanzevitch, deported from Israel after the two women were arrested on Jan. 7, reportedly admitted that she took the pictures but claimed she did not know their purpose. Kanzevitch entered the country as a tourist.

David, who emigrated to Israel two years ago, will be sentenced in three weeks, the radio reported.

BEIJING (MARCH 5) UPI - China Monday expelled an American businessman for engaging in illegal missionary work, the official press reported.

John P. Cragin, a member of the board of directors of a Sino-foreign joint venture in the northern port city of Tianjin, was ordered to leave China by Monday, the official Xinhua News Agency said. The report did not say where Cragin was from in the United States or what his business affiliation was there or in China.

The report said Cragin was expelled for conducting missionary work in the guise of holding English-language training courses, presumably for the joint venture's Chinese employees, since last October.

''On February 17, agents of the local Public Security bureau seized materials he was using for missionary work, an activity incompatible with his status,'' the report said.

It quoted a local public security official as saying Cragin was ''ordered to leave China before March 5 in accordance with the law on the entry and exit of foreigners.''

China expressly forbids religious proselytizing and has expelled foreigners charged with illegal missionary work on several occasions, most recently last year.

Cragin left China Monday from Tianjin's Zhangguizhang Airport, the report said.

LONDON (MARCH 5) UPI - Protesters dressed as Robin Hood disrupted a council meeting Monday in the legendary bandit's town of Nottingham, blowing whistles and splattering legislators with shaving cream to convey their displeasure with a new tax.

Widespread anger over the poll tax, which will replace property taxes with a levy on every resident, has created a severe mid-term challenge to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, whose Conservatives are lagging in opinion polls 19 points behind the opposition Labor Party.

The British Broadcasting Corp. reported that the demonstration occurred at a council meeting to decide the tax rate to be paid by residents of the county surrounding Nottingham, 130 miles north of London.

Demonstrators dressed in green tunics to resemble Robin Hood - the medieval figure who stole from the rich to give to the poor and battled the evil sheriff of Nottingham - began chanting and blowing whistles when it was announced the annual rate would be the equivalent in pounds of about $625 a person, about a third more than expected.

At least 10 activists stormed from the galleries into the council chamber, where they threw official papers to the floor, raised banners and hurled paper plates filled with shaving cream at the legislators.

Police officers dragged off several protestors. The mayor canceled the rest of the meeting.

Thatcher argues that the poll tax is more fair than property taxes because all residents - not just property owners - will pay for local government. But the levy has met with fierce opposition in Scotland and Northern Ireland, where it has already been imposed.

Poll taxes are to be collected in England and Wales beginning next month. Critics argue that the fee is unjust, because low-income people with many children may pay more than childless wealthy Britons with large estates.

Local councils set the tax for each area, which now range from about $217 to $969.

LONDON (MARCH 5) UPI - There is a shortage of loudmouths in the city of York, where officials are looking for someone to roam the streets bellowing out the news as a town crier.

''We need someone with a 1,000-watt voice and a personality, but they are not exactly coming forward,'' said Paul Wells of the visitor bureau in York, a medieval walled city 210 miles north of London. ''Perhaps people don't like shouting so much these days.''

Wells said Monday he had approached employment agencies because only two people had applied for a ''shout-off'' planned for early April to decide who had the stentorian qualities required of a town crier.

The post that has not been filled since its last occupant died in 1872 at age 80, but the primitive means of mass communication is now being resurrected as a tourist attraction, he said.

The successful candidate will wear a traditional uniform and, for five hours a day walk, will walk around the heart of the city, shouting out items from a local newspaper and from news agencies, he said.

Wells said the crier, traditionally known as a bellman, would get free meals and be paid about $8,500 per year, a salary that would also be supplemented by fees for appearing at conventions.

''We are looking for an extrovert, but maybe not everybody wants to stand out in a crowd,'' Wells said. ''We want to add some life and color to the streets.''

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - A decorated Miami FBI counterintelligence agent was suspended and lost his security clearance as a result of a three-year investigation involving allegations of spying for Cuba, a published report said Monday.

The New York Times reported that many of the agent's colleagues have rallied to his defense, saying he appears to be a victim of retaliation because of his crucial role in a landmark discrimination suit against the FBI by Hispanic employees.

The Times, citing government officials and friends of the 15-year FBI veteran, Fernando Mata, reported that the investigation has sparked a bitter battle within the bureau.

Few details of the investigation were available and an FBI spokesman in Washington would only confirm that Mata, 48, had been placed on indefinite administrative leave, refusing to say why.

''We have nothing to say on the matter, the spokesman, Robert Davenport, told the newspaper.

But the Cuban-American agent's lawyer, Hugo Rodriguez, told the newspaper Mata has been repeatedly questioned by the FBI about the possibility of contacts several years ago with Cuban intelligence agents.

Rodriguez told the Times his client's security clearance was lifted several days after his suspension about a month ago.

Government officials and friends of the agent confirmed the lawyer's statements, and one friend told the newspaper that the FBI claimed to have information Cuban agents approached Mata in a bid to enlist him as a spy, the report said.

Several current and former agents who have worked with Mata called the allegations against him old and unreliable and contended that he was being harassed because he spoke out against the FBI's treatment of Hispanic employees.

''What the bureau is doing to Fernando Mata is unspeakable,'' Leo Gonzales an agent who retired last December after 19 years with the FBI, told the Times. ''There is no doubt in my mind that Fernando is a patriot and loyal American.

He described the investigation as an apparent ''pretext'' for forcing Mata out.

In the 1988 discrimination suit brought by Hispanic agents, a federal judge in Texas ordered the FBI to make sweeping changes in its promotion policies.

Mata, one of 300 plaintiffs, testified against the FBI at the trial and was frequently quoted in news stories about the case.

An FBI official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, rejected suggestions that Mata was a target of harassment by the bureau.

''No matter what you think of the FBI, it's ridiculous to think'' that the bureau would raise such a serious matter out of a desire for retaliation, the official told the Times.

Mata has been involved in several major investigations to counter spying by foreign counties, and colleagues say he risked his life in covert FBI assignments abroad, the Times said.

KNOXVILLE, TN (MARCH 5) UPI - The classroom TV show Channel One began beaming news and commercials into 400 schools across the country Monday despite protests from educators who see it as an attempt to buy the minds of America's children.

Chris Whittle, the Tennessee media mogul whose company produces the daily 12-minute program, hailed Channel One as a visionary educational tool and called the premiere ''an important day for all schools.''

But many educators and watchdogs for children's television denounced Channel One as commercial exploitation of students and predicted it will ''fall flat on its face.''

The first program included news from the Soviet Union and East Germany along with commercials for M&M candy, Cheetos chips and Gillette razors.

Channel One has signed agreements with 2,900 schools with an audience of 1.7 million teenagers in 34 states. Whittle Communications gives each school TV equipment worth up to $50,000 in return for showing the program and hopes to turn a profit on Channel One through advertising.

Whittle claims to have secured $200 million in ads so far with 65 percent of the commercial time sold for the next three years.

Channel One premiered Monday in the 400 schools that are fully equipped so far. The company said that number will increase each week.

''We're installing the technology at about 150 to 200 schools a week,'' Whittle spokesman Gary Belis said. ''At that rate, we should have 1,000 on-line by the end of the month. We have buckets of cash to pay the bills. We have a $170 million line of credit just for Channel One.''

Channel One has been controversial since Whittle first announced a year ago that commercials would pay for it. The program wraps 10 minutes of news and features around two minutes of ads.

''The while seduction in this is the equipment,'' said Lyle Hamilton of the National Education Association. ''Do we sell kids' minds for equipment? There's no educational group that supports Channel One.''

The New York State Board of Regents banned Channel One from public schools. California's superintendent of education threatened to withhold funds from schools that air it, and North Carolina also tried to ban the program.

Hamilton said A.J. Heinz, Maybelline cosmetics, Levi jeans and Wrigley chewing gum have backed out of ad agreements with Whittle, and he questioned whether Whittle actually has sold $200 million worth of commercials.

''Basically, they're launching a wounded ship,'' Hamilton said. ''They're charging Rolls-Royce prices, $150,000 for 30 seconds, for advertising.''

In September 1989, Ted Turner's Cable News Network started a commercial-free, 15-minute daily news program called CNN Newsroom to compete against Channel One. The program, provided free for schools with cable TV hookups, now is shown by 7,200 schools.

Educators said Whittle first targeted schools with children in middle to upper middle income families, but the success of CNN Newsroom forced Whittle to switch strategies and go after poorer rural schools.

''Channel Nni eventually is going to fall flat on its face,'' said Peggy Charren, founder of the non-profit Action for Children's Television in Cambridge, Mass. ''It's ridiculous to tell poor students that they need to buy things. What kind of message is that to kids who don't have any money?

''The poorer the schools, the more likely they are to want TV sets and the poorer the kids, the worse target those kids are to the advertisers. I think that is what eventually will cause the idea to disappear,'' she said.

In South Carolina, state education officials warned schools against accepting Channel One because of ''serious questions'' related to commercial exploitation of children.

But Jasper County, S.C., School Superintendent Dale Strickland said Whittle's offer of 28 televisions, a videocassette recorder and satellite dish was a sales pitch he could ill afford to refuse.

''Here we are in a deprived economic area and it's difficult to turn down $20,000 worth of equipment,'' he said.

Whittle watched Channel One's premiere with children and teachers in the library at Powell High School at Knoxville, where his company is based.

''We think this is an important day for all schools,'' said Whittle, who declined to say how much profit he hopes to make on Channel One. ''I predict within five years a system like this will be in 95 percent of all schools in the U.S. We project that by December of this year, 8,000 schools will have signed up.''

Teachers and students at schools showing Channel One said they are enthusiastic.

''All kids are pretty much in favor of it. I can see how some people get mad at it, but you learn a lot from it,'' said Powell High School student Jeff Rader, 16.

''You don't have to watch it if you don't want. You can always drag out your homework,'' said Tommy Jordan, 17.

AMERICUS, GA (MARCH 5) UPI - Gloria Carter Spann, sister of former President Jimmy Carter, died early Monday of pancreatic cancer, the same disease that killed her father, sister and brother, Billy. She was 63.

A spokesperson at Sumter Regional Hospital in Americus, near the family's hometown of Plains, said the former president was with his sister when she died at 1:25 a.m.

Spann was the ex-president's last surviving sibling.

Spann, who lived in Plains, is survived by her husband, Walter Spann, and a son, William Spann.

''Her immediate family, including her husband and her brother, the former president, and his wife, Rosalynn, were at her side'' at the time of death hospital spokeswoman Elaine Nicholson said.

Pancreatic cancer claimed the life of Carter's father, James Earl Carter Sr., when he was in his 50s.

Pancreatic cancer also resulted in the death of Billy Carter in September 1988 at age 51, about one year after he was diagnosed with the disease.

Carter's other sister, evangelist Ruth Carter Stapelton, died of pancreatic cancer in 1983 when she was 54.

Carter's mother, ''Miss Lillian'' Carter, died of breast cancer that spread to her pancreas and other organs.

Graveside services will be held at the Lebanon Cemetery in Plains Tuesday. The Rev. Virginia Jackson-Adams, pastor of Morningside Methodist Church in Americus, will preside.

The family is asking that memorials be made to the American Cancer Society.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Vincent Sombrotto, president of the letter carriers union, said Monday Americans get better postal service for their money than that provided in other countries, even if the cost of mailing a letter increases to 30 cents.

''For 25 cents - or even 30 cents - you can walk down to the corner, drop a letter in a metal mailbox, and within a few days it arrives at the home of a friend, relative or business associate hundreds or even thousands of miles away,'' said Sombrotto, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers,. ''Tell me what other service you can get in this country or any other country for 30 cents.''

Sombrotto, whose union has 315,000 members, made his comments just hours before the U.S. Postal Board of Governors was expected to approve a rate increase for all classes of mail.

The new rates, which would take effect in February 1991, would be the first since March 1988, when the cost of a first-class stamp increased from 22 to 25 cents.

Included in the proposed rates are new discounts for mailers who apply bar codes to first-class and third-class mail, volume discounts for Express Mail, and new flat rates for 3-, 4- and 5-pound Express Mail and priority mail packages.

The Postal Service estimates that the new rates will cost the average household $10 to $11 more per year.

Sombrotto cited a study conducted by his union that found West Germans pay 60 cents for first-class postage, while the Japanese pay 43 cents.

''West Germany in terms of its postal service is even more automated and more mechanized than the U.S. Postal Service and still they charge 60 cents for a piece of first-class mail.''

Sombrotto also said the study found that privatization of the Postal Service - an idea advocated by such conservative organizations as the Heritage Foundation and the Cato Institute - would greatly increase the cost of mail delivery in all areas of the country.

''A privatized, unregulated postal system would be the biggest sham ever put on the American people,'' Sombrotto said. ''I think there is an orchestrated campaign ... to try to bamboozle the American public into thinking that privatization will work.''

Sombrotto said residents of rural areas and inner cities will be the most adversely affected by privatization because private firms would be less likely to deliver unprofitable low volume mail.

''The amount of mail you receive is generally commensurate with the amount of wealth that a person has,'' Sombrotto said. ''Those people who live in the most desirable areas ... would get the best deal.

ANCHORAGE, AK (UPI) - Volcanic ash clouds blew over a sparsely populated and widely-scattered area north of Redoubt Volcano early Monday in the tempermental mountain's latest eruption, the Alaska Volcano Observatory reported.

The ash fall missed Anchorage, 110 miles northeast of the volcano, as the clouds sailed north of the volcano over a mountainous area.

The 10,197-foot mountain exploded Sunday night with a lightning display that has announced many of the eruptions.

The latest eruption sent a plume up to 40,000 feet, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

No heavy ashfall was reported from the high-level volcanic cloud.

Redoubt has been erupting violently and sporadically since bursting to life Dec. 14 after a quarter-century sleep.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Maverick Soviet communist Boris Yeltsin swept to victory in his race for the parliament of the Russian republic. The Soviet news agency Tass reports that initial results for elections in three key republics show Yeltsin swept away 11 rivals in his district in an outright win without the need for a runoff election. Pre-election polls in his district by an independent Soviet group set up to analyze the election forecast up to 90 percent of the ballots for Yeltsin.

South African security forces have moved into the nominally independent homeland of Ciskei following a bloodless military coup this weekend. WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The National League of Cities, representing 1,400 municipalities, called on the Bush administration Monday to create a ''peace dividend'' and urged the federal government to reinvest in the nation's towns and cities.

The league said any increases for defense or foreign aid, such as projects in Eastern Europe, Panama and Nicaragua, should come from federal tax increases. ''If we're going to spend that peace dividend in any other way than deficit reduction, then it should go to investing'' in local programs Mayor Bob Bolen of Fort Worth, Texas, the league's president, told a news conference outlining the organization's legislative and policy priorities.

Bolen's news conference began the league's annual city-congressional conference, which brings 3,000 local officials to Washington to hear administration and congressional officials.

''For 45 years, our nation has devoted its resources to military superiority,'' the league priorities statement said. ''The time has come to refocus the nation's resources, strength and imagination on domestic issues.

''It is time to make this peace divdend a reality and to reinvest it in America.''

High among the league's priorities are increases in spending on domestic programs such as the war on drugs, housing and community development, capital investment in such things as roads and bridges, and a call for restructuring the federal budget process and ending the Gramm-Rudman law that sets a rigid formula for reducing the federal budget.

The local officials also said they oppose reducing federal taxes until the federal operating budget is balanced They are also against ''mandated federal tax increases'' on cities and towns.

President Bush has proposed making cities pay Social Security and Medicare taxes for city employees in what Bolen described as ''a $5 billion hit.''

''We urge the elimination of off-budget borrowing and gimmickry such as the savings and loan bailout,'' the statement said, adding that trust funds, such as the highway and aviation trust funds with ''dedicated surpluses should not be permitted to artificially lower the deficit.''

Bolen said a major issue for the city officials was to convince Washington to start sending back to cities the money in such trust funds and said he was encouraged by Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner's promise to spend some $3.6 billion of the $7.6 billion in the aviation trust fund over the next five years.

Bolen also said the drug war continues as the cities' major legislative priority and he underscored local officials' call for a ''direct and flexible block grant'' program in which money would not have to pass through the states and local governments could control how the money is spent.

He also urged early action on reauthorizing the nation's housing and community development programs, noting that more than 1 million units of subsidized housing will soon be lost from the low income housing stock.

The league also said it opposed the federal government imposing demands - mandates - on cities and towns without providing the money to pay for them including the demand for wastewater treatment facilities, solid waste disposal facilities and environmental standards for clean air and clean water.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Secretary of State James Baker will represent the United States at the independence inaugural ceremony of Namibia on March 21, U.S. officials said Monday.

Namibia, formerly known as Southwest Africa, has been under South African military rule for the past 40 years, but the Pretoria government agreed in 1988 to a compromise, mediated by the United States, which led to free elections and a promise of independence.

In the compromise, signed at the United Nations, Cuba agreed to withdraw some 50,000 troops from Angola, just to the north of Namibia. Although those troop withdrawals are continuing on schedule, renewed fighting in Angola between government forces and UNITA have cast doubt on the complex deal. South African troops have been withdrawn from the northern part of Namibia and will leave the country entirely after independence.

Elections were held as scheduled in December in Namibia, with Sam Nujoma, the leader of the Southwest African Peoples Organization, being declared winner and president-elect.

Nujoma will be sworn into office on March 21 as independent Namibia's first head of government.

Early plans for the Baker trip had him going to South Africa, possibly meeting Nelson Mandela, the African Nationalist Congress leader released from political imprisonment last month. A visit to South Africa by Baker is still a possibility as part of the trip, officials said, but there are no official plans for him to go to South Africa now, sources said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Spotchecks of the farm credit rescue law suggest up to 700 borrowers each could get $1 million in debts erased while other farmers remain poor risks despite loan restructuring, auditors said Monday.

The figures were presented to a Senate Agriculture subcommittee in a hearing devoted to possible changes in the 1987 law. Activist farm organizations charged that many of the changes would put farmers out of business, rather than close loopholes.

The credit law generally requires the Farmers Home Administration to restructure loans if it would be cheaper than foreclosure. Restructuring can include writing off debts, changing interest rates or extending the life of the loan. Farmers also can "buy out" loans at the so-called recovery value.

Bush adminstration officials have asked for changes in the law, saying some farmers were abusing it. Since the law took effect, the FmHA has forgiven $2.8 billion owed by 15,978 borrowers, including $1 billion in loan buyouts.

"It seems that opponents of fair lending are using problems of implementation, which can be fixed, to discredit and try to eliminate one of the major achievements in federal farm policy," said Randolph Nodland of the National Family Farm Coalition.

The House was scheduled to debate a bill Tuesday that would limit loan writedowns to $250,000, allow only one writedown and buyout per borrower, and make loan buyouts available only to farmers who have acted in good faith with the government - changes in line with administration suggestions.

Assistant Inspector General James Ebbitt said 93 borrowers have received loan writedowns or writeoffs of $1 million or more. Another group of more than 600 borrowers, who borrowed more than $1 million each, were delinquent on their loans, raising the possibility of more million-dollar writedowns. Ebbitt said the two groups owed $1.3 billion in all.

John Harmon of the General Accounting Office said the GAO took a look at ten counties where the 1987 law had been heavily used. "Our analysis indicates that nine percent of the 160 restructured borrowers had favorable financial potential for successful farming operations," Harmon said in a report.

The others were hobbled by high debt ratios and poor income prospects,

Harmon said, including one who had a cash flow margin of $2. Their chances for success "without continued financial assistance appeared limited." Harmon blamed the situation on the FmHA's practice of analyzing loan options only until a borrower showed a positive cash flow.

Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., chairman of the subcommittee, indicated support for the administration in its drive to make "bad faith" borrowers ineligible for loan buyouts and to limit the amount of a writedown. However, he objected to the request for a cut-off date for automatic access to loan writedowns and buyouts.

Agriculture Undersecretary Roland Vautour said said a sunset date and a limit of one restructuring was essential to prevent borrowers from perpetually forcing the government to swallow losses.

NEW DELHI, INDIA (MARCH 5) UPI - India said Monday it would pay $12 a month in interim relief to each of about 500,000 victims of the 1984 Bhopal gas leak disaster, amid a legal battle over a settlement between Union Carbide and the former government.

Petroleum and Chemicals Minister M.S. Gurupadaswamy said in a statement that the administration of Prime Minister V.P. Singh would pay the relief for the next three years.

''The victims had suffered for five years and could not be asked to wait any longer,'' Gurupadaswamy said, referring to the world's worst industrial disaster that occurred before dawn on Dec. 3, 1984.

''No meaningful financial assistance had been given to the victims of this biggest chemical disaster of the world even after a period of five years '' he said.

About 40 tons of Methyl Isocyanate vaporized and spewed from an underground tank at the Union Carbide's now-defunct pesticide plant in the Madhya Pradesh state capital city of Bhopal, 400 miles south of New Delhi. The disaster left 3,300 people dead and hundreds of thousands reportedly injured.

Gurupadaswamy said the interim relief payment to about 500,000 people would cover all residents exposed to the toxic gas.

''We feel that all those people who were exposed to the gas suffered, even though some of the health affects may show up in the long run,'' he said.

He said the government has sanctioned $214 million to pay victims $12 every month. The payment would later be adjusted against the final compensation which victims may get through pending lawsuits, the minister said.

Singh's government appointed a cabinet panel in January to examine the compensation issue after it told the Supreme Court it would support petitions seeking to overturn a Feb. 14, $470 million settlement between the previous government of Rajiv Gandhi and the U.S.-based Union Carbide Corp.

As part of the settlement, Gandhi's government agreed to drop a $3 billion suit and all criminal cases against the multinational.

Several petitions contesting the settlement are pending in India's highest court of appeal. The petitions allege the settlement was meager and that the agreement to withdraw the criminal case against Union Carbide was illegal.

But Gandhi's government contended in court that the $470 million compensation was adequate and the settlement was aimed at providing immediate relief to victims. Litigation with Union Carbide, the government said, could have dragged on for at least 20 years.

Gurupadaswamy said, ''We have already decided to repudiate the settlement ordered by the previous government.''

Union Carbide has paid $470 million, but payments have not been distributed to victims because of the pending petitions.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Four major fast-food companies are defying an agreement with eight states to provide consumers with nutritional information at all outlets, a health advocacy group said Monday.

Center for Science in the Public Interest claimed McDonald's, Burger King, Kentucky Fried Chicken and Wendy's are failing to honor a July 1986 agreement made with the attorneys general of California, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, New Mexico, New York, Texas and Virginia.

The written agreement required the fast-food companies to make available pamphlets containing nutrition and ingredient information at all outlets and to post signs alerting consumers to the availability of the pamphlets, the non-profit consumer group said.

''We have urged the attorneys general to consider prosecuting the companies unless they resume full compliance within 60 days,'' said

Michael Jacobson, executive director of Center for Science in the Public Interest.

The center conducted a survey of about 20 outlets per company in up to nine states and found nutritional pamphlets available at only 25 percent of Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants, 42 percent of Burger King restaurants, 45 percent of McDonald's restaurants and none of the Wendy's restaurants.

''Most of the time when you ask a cashier for nutritional information, they don't know what you are talking about or how to get that information '' said Ricahrd Layman-Heitman, a spokesman for the consumer group.

The best firm in terms of nutritional information was Jack in the Box, a Southwestern region chain that had pamphlets on hand id.

Dick Detwiler, a spokesman for Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. in Louisville, Ky., said Monday that his firm has provided nutritional information through all of its restaurants ''since the mid-'80s.

''As far as we are concerned, we have complied with any agreement we have made with the attorneys general,'' Detwiler said, adding: ''We get very few requests for this kind of information.''

A spokeswoman for Wendy's International Inc., of Dublin, Ohio, said her firm does have nutritional brochures available at headquarters upon request. But she had no response to the consumer group's charges about the lack of such information at local outlets.

Officials at McDonald's Corp., of Oak Brook, Ill., and Burger King Corp., of Miami had no immediate comment.

Layman-Heitman said he thinks companies signed the 1986 agreement not out of concern for consumer health, but as a way of derailing legislation that would have required full nutrition and ingredient labeling on all fast-foods.

''A Big Mac that you eat in Washington is not different from one you eat in Montana, so standardized labeling on the package should not be difficult,'' he said.

KUWAIT (MARCH 5) UPI - A leading Kuwaiti newspaper Monday quoted Kuwait's crown prince as saying he supports revival of an elected national assembly with powers to question government policies, provided past mistakes are avoided.

Sheikh Saad al Abdullah al Sabah's views were communicated on Saturday to a group of 28 former deputies of the oil-rich emirate's dissolved parliament during a meeting held at Bayaan palace, some 6 miles south of Kuwait city.

''I am for an elected assembly, not only to monitor (the government) but also to question it,'' Mohammad Jassim al Saqr, editor of the daily Al Qabas, quoted the crown prince as saying.

''It is harmful not to have an assembly,'' the prince was quoted as saying.

''The existence of an assembly is in the interest of the government. It is damaging that we have no assembly.''

The meeting with the former deputies was the second since the government began dialogue with pro-democracy activists on ways of returning Kuwait to parliamentary government.

The emir of Kuwait, Sheikh Jaber al Ahmad al Sabah, dissolved the parliament in July 1986, after accusing deputies of causing social tensions at the height of the Iran-Iraq war, when the tiny emirate feared a spill-over from the Persian Gulf war on its territory.

Although some Arab Gulf states have consultative assemblies, Kuwait was the only one to have an elected parliament. Kuwait gained independence from Britain in 1961.

Kuwait's pro-democracy movement began its campaign to restore the parliament last January, and has staged a series of rallies to press its demands.

But it was not immediately clear whether Sheikh Saad had in mind an elected parliament or a consultative council, or shurah, as exists in some other gulf states, where these councils do not have the power to question the policies of their governments.

PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA (MARCH 5) UPI - Czechoslovakia called Monday for an urgent Warsaw Pact meeting on German unification amid growing concerns over Bonn's reluctance to guarantee Poland's western border.

''The borders of Poland must be confirmed so that all borders may lose their significance,'' Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier told a news conference at which he publicly requested the meeting.

His statements turn up the pressure on the West German government, which is under fire from both ends of the political spectrum for its stance on the border question.

Bonn has balked at signing a treaty recognizing the present Polish-German border drawn by the victorious Allies at the end of World War II. Chancellor Helmut Kohl has sought to link such a treaty to Warsaw's renunciation of claims for war reparations.

Conservatives in Kohl's own Christian Democrat party have threatened to withdraw their support for the chancellor if he relinquishes claims to German territory given to Poland at the end of the war.

Dienstbier stressed Czechoslovakia does not oppose German unification in principle because it believes ''each nation has the right to self-determination.''

''Even the Germans cannot be denied this,'' he said.

''We are asking only that the unification of Germany become instrumental in the (enhancing) ... of world and European security,'' Dienstbier said.

He said Czechoslovakia was calling for an urgent meeting of Warsaw Pact foreign ministers to discuss German unification March 17, one day before East German elections.

The meeting would involve ''consultations and exchanges of views on the consequences'' of German unification, he said.

Poland, East Germany and the Soviet Union already have responded favorably to the proposal but have not made a formal commitment, Dienstbier said.

Turning to the future of the Warsaw Pact itself, Dienstbier rejected Western claims that the East Bloc alliance is becoming obsolete and would soon disband.

''I believe the Warsaw Pact, if it is really transformed into a political organization of members with equal rights, still has a significant role to play in the future - as much as NATO,'' Dienstbier said.

ADDIS ABABA, ETHIOPIA (MARCH 5) UPI - Ethiopia, one of the most rigidly Marxist countries left in the world, announced limited reforms Monday aimed at liberalizing its economy and allowing opposition groups a restrained voice in government.

President Mengistu Haile Mariam, head of the country's Provisional Military Administrative Council, announced the proposed changes on behalf of the Worker's Party of Ethiopia.

He said the Worker's Party was to rename itself the Democratic Unity Party of Ethiopia and that opposition groups would be permitted to function under the new organization.

Mariam said groups ''which bring themselves ... under the umbrella of the Democratic Unity of the Ethiopian people after conditions for peaceful dialogue have been discussed'' may be able to participate in government.

However, it was ''subject to (the DUPE's) will and decision that these groups should participate in the country's political life,'' he said.

Mariam said other reforms included the rebuilding of a market economy in Ethiopia, decontrolling food production and forcing the state-owned Agricultural Marketing Corp. to compete with private grain merchants.

Ethiopia's economy has collapsed in the past 10 years. Foreign debt went from $169 million in 1970 to $2.4 billion in 1987, according to World Bank figures.

The government has had to contend with two simultaneous civil wars and a succession of famines, the latest of which threatens about 4 million people this year.

Western relief officials have repeatedly said that centralized food production control significantly contributed to past famines, forbidding peasants from storing surplus grain in good years.

Since the Soviet Union embarked on economic and political reforms, Western diplomats in Addis Ababa say Mengistu's hard-line regime has progressively lost Soviet military and economic support.

Some diplomats speculate that Ethiopia has come under increasing Soviet pressure to implement reforms along the lines of perestroika and glasnost.

From Mengistu's speech, it was not clear how far the reforms were intended to go or how fast they would be implemented.

Hariam announced the reforms as rebels in northern Ethiopia said they had killed 1,030 government troops in five days of fierce fighting and captured the strategic town of Addis Zemen.

The clandestine radio of the Tigre People's Liberation Front reported the fall of the town, but there was no government comment on the rebel claim.

The fall of Addis Zemen, 230 miles north of the capital Addis Ababa, would mean that the rebels strengthened their control over the two major roads from the capital to the north.

The government already concedes that it has no access to Tigre province, through which the other major road runs.

The Eritrean People's Liberation Front has fought a 28-year war of independence against the government in Addis Ababa. The Tigre People's Liberation Front, more Marxist than the country's rulers, has fought since 1977 to oust Mariam.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Fox Broadcasting has canceled ''It's Garry Shandling's Show'' and put ''The Reporters'' on hiatus to make room for two new shows, the network announced Monday.

The new programs are Francis Ford Coppola's ''The Outsiders,'' an hour-long series based on the characters in S.E. Hinton's novel, and ''In Living Color,'' a comedy starring Keenan Ivory Wayans.

''The Outsiders'' will debut in a 90-minute special on Sunday, Mar. 25, following ''Married...With Children.'' It will take its regular place on the schedule Sunday, Apr. 1, displacing ''Booker.''

LONDON (MARCH 5) UPI - Stock prices closed lower in light trading on the London International stock exchange Monday as the pound continued to decline amid worries over Britain's inflation and the possibility of higher interest rates.

The blue-chip Financial Times 100-stock index, which gained 16.4 points Friday, fell 24.3 points to 2,230.5. The narrower top 30 industrial average lost 18.6 points to 1,755.6.

Volume amounted to around 316 million shares, compared with 542 million shares traded Friday.

Analysts said news that Welsh Secretary Peter Walker would resign from the Cabinet heightened market worries over Britain's political future and helped drive the pound lower against major foreign currencies.

On the London Foreign Exchange, the pound fell more than one cent against the U.S. dollar, despite support from the Bank of England, closing at $1.6390 compared with $1.6530 Friday.

The market was already jittery following debate over the poll tax and the weekend release of opinion polls showing the Labor Party leading the Conservatives by its largest margin in 20 years.

On the economic front, the Central Statistical Office reported Britain's retail sales volume was unchanged from provisional figures showing a 1.3 percent decline in January from December and a 2.1 percent rise from January 1989.

In a separate report, the government said new consumer credit extended by finance houses, building societies, other specialist credit grantors and retailers totaled a seasonally adjusted $6.36 billion in January, up from a revised $5.22 billion in January 1989.

Analysts said the reports did little to stir investor enthusiasm.

Among the most widely traded stocks, consumer stocks such as stores and breweries were among the issues leading the downward slid.

Bass lost 34 cents to $15 and Body Shop tumbled 39 cents to $7.44.

The political uncertainties depressed British Telecom, which slipped 12 cents to $4.59, while concern over the prospect of higher interest rates sent Westbury down 13 cents to $2.85.

Plans to buy its own shares boosted Imperial Chemical Industries by21 cents to $17.45.

Northumbrian slipped 16 cents to $2.75 amid worries the government may revoke the company's licenses to dump sewage sludge into the North Sea.

Elsewhere in Europe, prices on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange closed slightly higher in light trading.

The German Stock Index, which surged 30.36 points Friday, added 14.93 points to 1,833.16.

Traders said prices gained amid mild bargain hunting.

(MARCH 5) UPI - TODAY'S PEOPLE:

STALLONE IN CLAY: There's another Sylvester Stallone statue in the news - a 12-foot nude one. Last week officials in Philadelphia saw fit to remove Stallone's ''Rocky'' statue from in front of the Philadelphia Art Museum but another monumental figure of the actor is going on exhibit in New York. The larger-than-life statue will be included in a show of 60 paintings and sculptures by figurative artists at the New York Academy of Art starting Thursday. Sculptor Martine Vaugel said she was commissioned by Stallone and his former wife, Brigitte Nielsen, to do a double statue of them but she removed Nielsen after they were divorced and used the extra clay to make Sylvester larger than life. Vaugel calls the statue

''Age of Steel.''

MONEY TALKS: BANK: Bruce Willis makes a better deal than Donald Trump. Willis put in only three or four days of work in providing the voice for the baby in the movie ''Look Who's Talking'' but it's going to earn him some $10 million even though he's never seen in the film, according to Premiere magazine. Instead of a flat salary, Willis agreed to take a percentage of the movie's gross and when ''Look Who's Talking'' became a surprise hit, he reaped a windfall that's double what he earned for starring in ''Die Hard.'' Premiere says Willis's take exceeds what it cost to make the movie and is more than the producers will make.

ATWATER PASSES OUT AT PODIUM: Lee Atwater, the chairman of the Republican National Committee, underwent a round of tests Monday after fainting in the middle of a speaking engagement in Washingon. Atwater, 39, recovered quickly after passing out at a fund-raiser for Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and was assisted by doctors in the audience before being taken to a hospital. A party spokeswoman, Leslie Goodman, said Atwater was already joking on his way to the hospital and she denied reports that Atwater had been on a liquid diet. ''We'll just take it one day at a time,'' Goodman said. ''As soon as we have a doctor's report we'll have more details.''

GLIMPSES: The Starlight Foundation, a non-profit group that grants the wishes of seriously ill children, has a star-laden lineup for its March 13 fund-raiser in New York. In addition, Debbie Gibson will sing and Emma Samms, Joan Rivers, Mary Frann, Dr. Ruth Westheimer and Jack Scalia are schedule to attend. NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Nearly half the city's professional women who responded to a magazine survey said they have been mugged, robbed or raped and a similar number say their fears of criminals are racially based, a survey showed Monday.

Of the 350 women who responded to a survey by New York Woman magazine, 163 or 47 percent, said they have been mugged, robbed or raped.

Only one respondent said she had no fears at all and those who were not victims chalked it up as much to luck as to cautious behavior.

The respondents represent a readership that lives primarily in low-crime areas of Manhattan, and not in New York's more crime-prone neighborhoods, publisher Amy Rappeport said.

At least half the respondents conceded their crime fears are racially based and many white women responded that blacks are predisposed to being criminals, the magazine said.

Professional black women expressed frustration that, after working late at night, they often could not get a taxi driver to stop for them because of their skin color, leaving them more prone to criminal attacks. Black women said that their fears of being alone in white neighborhoods escalated after the killings of black youths in Bensonhurst, Brooklyn and Howard Beach, Queens.

BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA (MARCH 5) UPI - Argentine financial markets were closed by government decree Monday in the wake of the announcement of a new austerity plan designed to drastically reduce the number of state employees.

One objective of the plan was to cool off a stampede on the U.S. dollar, which since early January has skyrocketed from 1,300 australes to $1 to last Friday's close of 5,500 australes to $1.

The run on the dollar was a major inducement to hyperinflation, now running at an annual rate of over 8,000 percent. The reaction of the business and financial community will be uncertain until the money markets reopen.

The U.S. dollar is traditionally the main measuring stick of confidence in the Argentine economy. When confidence is weak, investors prefer to put their funds into the dollar instead of interest deposits of local currency the austral.

The CGT-Azopardo labor confederation, the more militant of two umbrella union organizations controlled by members of President Carlos Menem's Peronist Party, called a meeting to draft a statement about the plan. By Argentine labor union standards, this represented a cautious, muted reaction.

Peronist labor leaders called 14 general strikes against all the the economic austerity programs of former President Raul Alfonsin, who governed from 1983 to 1989 but belonged to a rival political party.

The latest austerity plan, Menem's fifth since he took office July 8 last year, includes the forced retirement of government workers two years before their regular retirement date. For the two years, they will be paid full salaries.

The Central Bank announced late Sunday night that it will require large purchasers of foreign exchange to register with government authorities, a change in procedures which apparently motivated the closing of banks and foreign exchange houses Monday. Economy Minister Erman Gonzalez said the personnel reductions were designed to cut government administrative costs by 25 percent.

He said that the job positions of all 56 secretaries of state, the rank just below Cabinet minister, will be terminated, and that the number of subsecretaries, the third-ranking civil service job, will be cut from the current 112 to 32.

Erman's plan included the postponement by 60 days of payments to suppliers by state agencies and the termination of discount loans by the Central Bank to member banks as of Sept. 30.

Capital gains taxes will be increased 1.5 percent, export taxes will be hiked five percent, and subsidies to exports will be curbed, he said. Other taxes will be indexed daily to keep pace with inflation, he said. The national housing bank will be abolished, its functions merged with those of the Banco de la Nacion, he said.

The government accompanied the announcement of its austerity package with some military sabre-rattling. The newspaper Clarin, apparently on a leak, published Saturday a Menem decree enabling the armed forces to intervene in armed civilian insurrections.

Throughout Argentina Monday morning, army barracks commanders read a statement by Chief of Staff Gen. Isidro Caceres, who declared the army was "absolutely prepared and ready to do its duty." He said the army would abide by "constitutional norms" and was ready to defend "fundamental institutions."

OTTAWA (MARCH 5) UPI - The Canadian government's composite leading indicator rose 0.3 percent in December, its fourth consecutive monthly gain, Statistics Canada reported Monday.

The strongest increases were related to housing demand, furniture and appliance sales and employment in personal and business services, the government's information gathering agency said. The 0.3 percent advance matched November's increase. The October rise was 0.2 percent.

According to Statistics Canada, the Housing Spending Index, a composite of housing starts and house sales, recorded its largest increase since early 1987, led mainly by house sales in western Canada. Since April, housing sales have risen twice as fast in Alberta and British Columbia as in the rest of the country, reflecting gains in labor income.

The Housing Spending Index jumped 2.4 percent in December, following a gain of 2.0 percent the previous month. Furniture and appliance sales rose 0.2 percent in December, while sales of other durable goods were up 0.5 percent, mainly because manufacturer's rebates spurred car sales during the month.

New orders for durable goods declined 0.2 percent in December after five months of growth. Statistics Canada attributed the loss to slower orders for capital goods, which are highly volatile on a monthly basis. Imports of machinery and equipment rose in December, while shipments and stocks of finished goods were relatively unchanged.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater, playing down news reports about U.S. hostages in the Middle East, said Monday ''we do not have any indication of an imminent hostage release.''

Fitzwater read to reporters a statement reiterating that the Bush administration is ''ready and eager'' to talk to Iran, but insisting that there are no current talks and that there will be ''no deals.''

''We have always called for immediate, unconditional and safe release of the hostages,'' Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater conceded that he is concerned that his comments, just by making them, may still somehow be interpreted as reason for new hope.

''I am not trying to create any new expectations,'' said Fitzwater. ''And there are no reasons to believe there are any.''

An editorial Monday in the Iranian newspaper Kayhan International suggested that Jesse Jackson and former Attorney General Ramsey Clark visit Tehran as unofficial envoys, the state-owned Islamic Republic News Agency said.

The editorial came amid reports from Beirut that an Iranian delegation, which paid an unofficial visit to Beirut and Damascus on Sunday, may have discussed the plight of the 18 Western hostages with Syrian and Lebanese officials.

Led by Mahmud Rafsanjani, a brother of Iranian President Akbar Hashemi-Rafsanjani, the delegation reportedly met Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al Sharaa in Damascus and Lebanese Health Minister Abdullah Rasi in Beirut.

The Independent newspaper of London reported Sunday the delegation's mission was to organize the release of one or more of the captives held by Shiite Moslems. It said Iranians and U.S. officials have held secret talks in Geneva, Muscat, Oman, and Ankara, Turkey.

President Bush last week said there have been no clandestine talks, but Moslem sources in Beirut have said that one of the American captives was likely to win freedom as a result of secret diplomacy.

Fitzwater told reporters at the White House, ''We can't say there is any movement'' on the fate of the hostages.

''On the other hand, when we see comments from (President) Rafsanjani,'' who says he wants improved relations with the West, ''when we see stories about Peggy Say (sister of hostage Terry Anderson) ... we hope her optimism is justified,'' Fitzwater said.

''So there is activity in that sense,'' Fitzwater said. ''But we do not have any indication of an imminent hostage release.''

He said, ''There are no U.S. government officials presently speaking to Iranians about the hostages.''

He quickly added, however, reading from a statement he made last week, that ''people all over the world'' - businessmen and private citizens, foreign diplomats, the relatives of hostages - are seeking the captives' freedom. The press secretary said some of them consult with the administration, but that none represent the U.S. government.

CALAIS, FRANCE (MARCH 5) UPI - Eurotunnel estimated Monday that construction cost overruns will amount to more than $2.6 billion, but a precise figure will not be known for several more weeks.

"The difference of opinion between Eurotunnel and its contractors over payments will mean that we will have to wait several weeks before the commission of experts working on the subject can arrive at a conclusion," Eurotunnel President Andre Benard said at a news conference held to mark the introduction of the last of the giant Japanese-made forage machines being used to drill the tunnel.

Benard said that 75 percent of the additional financing for the project, which is being built without any government funds, would come from new bank loans, and that the rest would be raised through a capital increase. The funding package would take into account both inflation and interest rates in an effort to avoid a new financial crisis, he said.

Eurotunnel ran into financial difficulties earlier this year when the group of banks whose funds were backing the project refused to extend further loans until the consortium settled disputes with construction contractor Transmanche Link. The issue was settled after a shake-up of Eurotunnel's management.

Transmanche Link President Philippe Essig sharply criticized the banks' previous refusal to extend further credits. "This is not the way one manages a project of this magnitude," he said.

But Pierre Matheron, the project's construction director, said the tunnel was well ahead of schedule despite the financial difficulties. He said that 16 miles of the three tunnels that make up the project, representing 45 percent of the total, had been drilled on the French side and that British workers drilled another 21 miles from their side of the English Channel.

Matheron said the two sides drilling the service tunnel are expected to meet halfway under the channel this November. This will be marked by a ceremony that French President Francois Mitterrand and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher are scheduled to attend.

CAPE CANAVERAL, FL (MARCH 5) UPI - Other than an apparently minor hydraulic leak, the shuttle Atlantis landed in excellent condition, setting the stage for Discovery's blastoff April 12 to launch the Hubble Space Telescope, officials said Monday.

Discovery was towed from its hanger to NASA's nearby Vehicle Assembly Building Monday for attachment to a pair of solid-fuel boosters and an external fuel tank. Rollout to launch pad 39B is scheduled for March 16.

At Edwards Air Force Base in California, meanwhile, engineers said Atlantis came through its 4 1/2-day military flight with only a handful of minor problems, although high winds at the Mojave Desert landing site prevented technicians from immediately tracing the cause of a hydraulic leak.

Atlantis and its five-man all-military crew glided to a smooth touchdown Sunday on dry lakebed runway 23 to close out a successful mission that began last Wednesday at the Kennedy Space Center. Left behind in orbit, sources said, was a secret military satellite built to spy on the Soviet Union.

During Atlantis's glide back to Earth, one of the ship's three hydraulic power systems lost pressure for unknown reasons. The hydraulic system is used to provide power for the landing gear brakes and to move the shuttle's wing flaps and rudder.

While Atlantis was never in any danger, hydraulic power is required for a safe landing and NASA engineers want to find out what went wrong as soon as possible. But only a few drops of bright red hydraulic fluid were visible on the spaceship and the problem did not appear to be serious.

''We will have to definitely isolate the problem and the reason for the problem,'' Conrad Nagel, the engineer in charge of Atlantis's ground processing, said by telephone from California. ''To me, a hydraulic leak could be as simple as a (quick-disconnect fitting) coming unhooked. It could be as simple as an instrumentation problem with some minor leaks.''

But high winds gusting more than 35 knots Monday at Edwards prevented them from getting into the shuttle's aft engine compartment where the spaceplane's three hydraulic power plants are located.

Otherwise, Nagel said, Atlantis sailed through the 34th shuttle mission in excellent condition, with only minor damage to its heat-shield tiles and landing gear brakes. If the weather cooperates, Atlantis, bolted to the back of NASA's 747 transport jet, will be flown back to Florida this weekend.

Back at the Kennedy Space Center, engineers began Discovery's final processing for rollout to launch pad 39B March 16 and takeoff next month.

Discovery's payload, the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope, is scheduled to be taken to the launch pad's ultra-clean ''white room'' March 26 for installation in Discovery's cargo bay March 28.

Liftoff of the 35th shuttle mission, the third of nine planned for 1990, is set for 9:21 a.m. EDT on April 12, the ninth anniversary of the first shuttle flight and the 29th year to the day since cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin became the first human in space.

Once in operation above Earth's obscuring atmosphere, the telescope's 94.5-inch mirror will allow astronomers to peer seven times deeper into the cosmos and with 10 times more clarity than ever before, allowing astronomers to gain unprecedented insights into the forces that forged the universe.

The telescope and its five instruments will allow astronomers to study stars and galaxies up to 14 billion light years away, that is, the unimaginable distance light travels in 14 billion years at a speed of 186,000 miles per second.

At that distance, astronomers expect to view galaxies that were formed shortly after the big bang explosion that is thought to have created the cosmos some 15 billion years ago.

BUCHAREST, ROMANIA (MARCH 5) UPI - It took nearly as long as the revolution itself, but engineers finally succeeded Monday in knocking down a 7-ton statue of Lenin that symolized communist rule for three decades.

The provisional government gave engineers the go-ahead to remove the monument Saturday after a weeklong hunger strike and anti-communist demonstrations around its base on Free Press Square.

But Lenin turned out to be as tough a foe as Nicolae Ceausescu, the hard-line communist dictator who was driven from power Dec. 22 and executed three days later.

About 300 people cheered as the 20-foot-high bronze figure was finally hauled off its pedestal with steel cables looped in a noose around its neck. The imposing figure had stood in the square of the national press offices for 30 years.

Engineers tried to pull the statue down on Saturday, but it refused to budge. They finally used blow torches to painstakingly sever the iron bars pinning Lenin's feet to the huge marble platform.

As two cranes lifted Lenin clear of the pedestal on Monday, an Orthodox priest in black robes jumped onto the marble block and raised a large gold crucifix to the applause of the crowd.

But Lenin's steely black likeness gave workers trouble to the end.

''Look Lenin won't lie down,'' shouted a spectator as engineers struggled to bring the figure, dangling above the crowd, to the ground.

Part of the crowd scattered as the statue suddenly lurched menacingly toward them. It was brought to rest a few moments later.

Now that is finally vanquished, the monument, daubed with yellow paint by protesters, is expected to join Stalin in storage until its fate is decided.

Some say it will be melted down and molded into church bells.

Other more cyncical bystanders joked that the government is probably planning to relocate the statue at a more prominent site - perhaps in the capitol.

''It's a diversion by President (Ion) Iliescu,'' said architect Maricus Popescu, 36, of the government's decision to remove the monument.

''The statue has no importance for us. More important is the building behind. That's the real symbol of communism,'' he said, pointing to the government-run newspaper offices considered by some critics to be the seat of political propaganda.

CHICAGO (MARCH 5) UPI - Grain futures were pressured by weather conditions and were mostly lower Monday on the Chicago Board of Trade, while soybeans generally were higher on spillover from soybean oil.

The grains were pressured by a storm system moving across the Grain Belt. The weather kept the grains on the defensive, along with the lack of export business.

Commercials and professionals dominated the selling in the grains while commission houses were small buyers.

Soybean oil futures were sharply higher and were at or near session highs at the close. Tight supplies, light delivery notices and rumors of Soviet interest in vegetable oils triggered the rally in the oil market.

Soybeans were moderately higher on spillover from the oil pit, although trading was subdued.

The impending harvest activity in South America also weighed on soybean values.

Basis levels were mixed and country movement was light.

At the close, corn was off 1 to up 1/2, soybeans up 3 3/4 to down 1, wheat off 2 to 4 and oats up 3/4 to 1 3/4.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) UPI - One day after watching the sudden death of teammate Hank Gathers on the court, the Loyola Marymount Lions Monday postponed any decision on whether they will continue their basketball season without their stricken superstar.

Gathers, the 11th-leading scorer in NCAA history, collapsed Sunday during the semifinals of the West Coast Conference tournament and died at a hospital without regaining consciousness. He was 23.

The WCC tournament, the winner of which receives an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament, was canceled about four hours after Gathers was pronounced dead at 6:55 p.m. at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital.

Conference officials then announced they would offer the bid to Loyola, the league's runaway regular-season champion. The NCAA tournament is scheduled to begin March 15.

The Lions and Coach Paul Westhead met before an emotional half-hour news conference on campus. Westhead said the session was marked by a ''great deal of quietness.''

''The fact that we haven't made a decision is because we haven't raised the question,'' Westhead said. ''If the question was, would the team play today or tomorrow or in three days .. we wouldn't play. Our concern right now is with Hank and his family.''

Flags on campus were flown at half-staff, and classes went on as scheduled. A sign on the door of the gym at Gersten Pavilion said, ''Hank We Love You.'' A mass was scheduled for noon Tuesday at the Sacred Heart Chapel on the Jesuit campus.

An autopsy was to be performed later Monday.

Loyola guard Jeff Fryer, who spoke at the news conference with teammate Bo Kimble - a friend of Gathers since their high-school days in Philadelphia - seemed in no condition to make a decision about his team's immediate future.

''I don't care if we don't play another game this year,'' said Fryer, who wore dark sunglasses and a black turtleneck while struggling for words.

''We just lost a great part of our family. Before the game in the locker room, Hank said he was feeling strong as ever. We just don't understand how a man that could be that strong could leave us so quickly.''

Said Kimble: ''Hank and I were like brothers, so close. We overcame so many different obstacles. I just know Hank would want us to be strong and go on.

''I love him so much. I'm going to miss you, Hank.''

Funeral arrangements are pending.

Westhead said Gathers was a man on whom the team could depend.

''''Hank The Bank; I often called him Bankman,'' Westhead said. ''He was our guy as a player and a person. He was the leader of our team, the fiber of what we are. Whatever we were, we were Hank's team.

''We called him the Bankman because we went to him for everything - rebounds, points, for life.''

Moments after dunking on a spectacular alley-oop play that gave the Lions a 25-13 lead over the University of Portland, the strapping 6-foot-7 Gathers crumbled in the halfcourt circle with 13:34 to play in the first half.

Gathers attempted to rise but could not. The crowd of about 4,000 at Gersten Pavilion, cheering wildly after the dunk, suddenly sat in stunned silence as the star forward went into seizure.

Gathers had fainted during a Dec. 9 game against UC Santa Barbara. An irregular heartbeat was determined to be the cause, and Gathers was placed on medication.

Gathers returned after missing two games but appeared lethargic for several weeks, which he blamed on the medication. He then talked doctors into reducing his dosage.

Asked if Gathers should have been allowed to play following the fainting spell, Loyola Athletic Director Brian Quinn responded: ''Complete medical clearance was granted for him to compete.''

An imposing physical specimen, the 210-pound Gathers was one of the nation's finest players. Working under the Lions' run-and-gun offense, he averaged 29 points and 10.8 rebounds a game this year.

He once desribed himself as ''the strongest man in America.''

Gathers, who transferred with Kimble from Southern Cal after the 1985-86 season, was expected to be a high draft choice in the NBA. He also had aspirations of becoming a sportscaster.

Last season, he became only the second player in NCAA history to lead the nation in scoring (32.7) and rebounding (13.7).

He had 28 points Saturday in a victory over Gonzaga, and his dunk Sunday gave him 2,222 points for his college career.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Parents generally are involved with their children's education at home, but say a lack of time and work commitments often prevent them from taking part in activities at school, a poll showed Monday.

The survey, commissioned by Newsweek Inc. for the National PTA and Chrysler's Dodge division, found that 92 percent of parents talked with their children about school at least once a week and 73 percent helped with homework weekly.

But most parents did not attend a back-to-school night or participate in a parent group last fall, the poll showed. When parents were active, they were more likely to take part in fund-raising or extracurricular activities at school than in academic matters.

''This survey confirms what we had feared, that many parents are doing only half their job when it comes to getting a good education for their children,'' said Ann Lynch, president of the National PTA.

The issue of parental involvement has become increasingly important since the Bush administration made the right of parents to choose their children's schools the cornerstone of its education policy.

Lynch said the poll suggests schools should make greater efforts to involve parents, such as holding activities on weekends, before the administration's ''choice'' philosophy becomes a reality.

''Right now, choice is not equitable,'' she said. ''A lot of parents in this country are not equipped with a knowledge of schools.''

In a speech to the National PTA in the East Room of the White House, President Bush also stressed the need for more parental involvement in schools.

''Too many parents have fallen into the habit of thinking of education as a service we can hand over to the school boards, to you leaders, much in the same way we expect our cities to provide electricity or water,'' he said.

''Education is not a utility. Education is a national mission. It really must include parents,'' Bush said.

The telephone poll, which appears in an advertising section in the March 12 issue of Newsweek magazine, was based on a national sample of 538 heads of households with children in school. Conducted by the ICR Survey Research Group, it had a margin of error of plus or minus 4.5 percentage points.

The poll found 57 percent of parents said their role was ''extremely influential'' in education. Fifteen percent rated TV as extremely important and 21 percent said video games were - a finding Lynch called ''shocking.''

Forty-four percent of parents took part in a back-to-school night, 46 percent attended a parent-organization meeting, 63 percent went to a class or school program and 71 percent attended a scheduled parent-teacher conference.

Of those who did not participate in a parent group, 72 percent said they did not have the time and 66 cited work commitments as a deterrent.

''There is absolutely no excuse for a parent to say, 'I work. I don't have the time,''' Lynch told a news conference. ''They must make sacrifices.''

Sixty-nine percent of parents discussed school topics with their child nearly every school day, 58 percent helped their child with homework two to three times a week, and 52 percent read to their child at least once a week.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Supreme Court ruled North Carolina's death penalty sentencing scheme unconstitutional Monday because it prevents a jury from considering all mitigating circumstances.

As a result of the court's 6-3 decision, North Carolina Attorney General Lacy Thornburg said as many as 70 of the 84 convicted murderers on the state's death row must be given new sentencing hearings.

''This decision has not struck down the death penalty in North Carolina, but has made the process more complicated,'' Thornburg said, adding he would ask the legislature to ''re-examine our death penalty statute and make changes that will make the sentence of death more enforceable.''

The case decided by the court specifically lifts the death sentence for convicted murderer Dock McKoy Jr. and sends his case back to a lower court for resentencing.

McKoy and the others who get new hearings could again be sentenced to death.

The case focused on a section of the state's death penalty law requiring a sentencing jury to agree unanimously that the same two mitigating circumstances exist in a murderer's case.

The court found the Eighth Amendment protection against cruel and unusual punishment allows members of a jury to balance any mitigating circumstances against aggravating circumstances in a crime in deciding whether to impose the death penalty.

''The unanimity requirement thus allows one holdout juror to prevent the others from (considering) evidence that they believe calls for a sentence less than death,'' Justice Thurgood Marshall wrote for the majority.

Justices William Brennan, Byron White, Harry Blackmun, John Paul Stevens and Anthony Kennedy voted in the majority.

Justice Antonin Scalia, in dissent, called the majority decision ''contrary to the consitutional principles governing jury trial ... and destructive of sound jury deliberation.''

Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor joined Scalia in dissent.

In other action, the court:

-Ruled 5-4 in a case from Oklahoma that juries can be told to ignore sympathy when sentencing a person to death.

-Upheld the death sentence of Californian Richard Boyde, who had challenged the constitutionality of jury instructions that have since been amended by state law.

-Ruled that a voluntary statement made to police can be used against a suspect at trial to challenge the truthfulness of the suspect's testimony even though the statement was taken without benefit of an attorney.

In the North Carolina case, McKoy was convicted of killing Deputy Sheriff Kress Horne at his home near Wadesboro, N.C., on Dec. 22, 1984.

Under the North Carolina sentencing scheme, a jury first must agree that two aggravating circumstances and the two mitigating circumstances exist in a murderer's case. They can impose a death penalty if they decide the aggravating circumstances outweigh those mitigating circumstances.

In response to a series of high court rulings to assure impartiality in death sentences, states have devised a variety of systems. Often, capital trials are divided with one phase concerning guilt and a separate phase to decide the penalty.

In many states, jurors hear arguments from both sides concerning aggravating circumstances - such the viciousness of the crime - and mitigating circumstances - such as youth or lack of a previous criminal record - before deciding whether execution is warranted.

Attorneys general from 17 states filed friend-of-the-court briefs urging the court to uphold the North Carolina sentencing system.

They argued the unanimity requirement is not prohibited by the Eighth Amendment and that overturning the law ''will generate renewed attacks on each of the statutory schemes authorizing the death penalty.''

The states filing briefs included California, Alabama, Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas and Virginia.

HOUSTON (MARCH 5) UPI - A Texas hospital is starting to use high-definition television for consultations that eventually could link rural residents to specialists at major medical centers, officials announced Monday.

Although regular television currently is employed for some medical consultations, the program at Texas Children's Hospital is believed to be the first to use high-definition television, or HDTV, to allow specialists to examine patients referred by other doctors.

HDTV projects a brighter, clearer and more detailed picture, with at least 200 times greater resolution than a standard television.

The Texas Children's program, in conjunction with Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., utilizes a fiber optic cable to transmit images with the quality of wide-screen 35mm movie film.

''The potential exists for this technology to have a tremendous impact on the accessibility of specialty healthcare, particularly to rural America '' said Mark Wallace, executive director of Texas Children's.

More than 55 percent of inpatients at Texas Children's are referrals from outside of Houston.

HDTV also could be used to screen critically ill patients being considered for movement from one hospital to another and for medical education, program organizers said.

Technology for transmitting HDTV currently exists in the Houston area. Researchers hope within a year to have developed a receiving unit at Texas Children's and one remote transmitting station, at a cost of about $750,000.

Dr. Ralph Feigin, chief physician at Texas Children's, said remote consultations using HDTV could be commonplace in the near future.

''I think five or 10 years down the line, there will be enormous opportunity to provide remote consultations,'' he said.

Officials said they expect the costs of HDTV remote consultation facilities to drop as the technology becomes more common.

BOXING

Michael ''The Silk'' Olajide began training at Kutshers Resort in New York for his title fight with World Boxing Organization super middleweight champion Thomas Hearns April 28 in Atlantic City, N.J. Olajide, 26, a Canadian native, has not worked out since his last bout in December, in which he lost a controversial 10-round decision to Dennis Milton. The fight has since been ruled a non-fight pending a hearing in New York State Supreme Court. Another championship bout will be featured that night, with Michael Moorer defending his WBO light heavyweight title against Mario Melo.

FOOTBALL

Craig Wolfley, a 10-year offensive lineman with Pittsburgh, is expected to sign Tuesday as a Plan B free agent with Minnesota. Wolfley is the third free agent for the Steelers to sign with another team within a week. Cornerback David Arnold signed with Houston and linebacker Vinson Smith signed with Dallas.

GOLF

Mutual of New York (MONY), citing a refocused national marketing program, decided not to renew the sponsorship it held with the Tournament of Champions for nearly two decades. The T of C, the first event on the PGA Tour held annually in La Costa, Calif., is the only event in which the field is made up of both regular and senior tour professionals who won on the tour during the previous calendar year.

HOCKEY

Toronto indefinitely suspended right-wing enforcer John Kordic without pay for disrupting the team on and off the ice. Maple Leafs General Manager Floyd Smith said that Kordic ''has shown a lack of discipline on numerous occasions and has become a deterrent and a distraction for the Maple Leafs both on and off the ice.'' ... Pat Verbeek of Hartford, who scored four goals and added four assists in three Whalers' victories, was named NHL Performer of the Week. ... The New York Islanders sent rookie left wing David Chyzowski, their first-round draft pick last season, back to his junior team, the Kamloops Blazers of the Western Hockey League for playing time on a regular basis.

ATLANTA (MARCH 5) UPI - The Coca-Cola Co. said Monday it will introduce a new non-carbonated sports drink this month called PowerAde, the second new beverage in as many weeks to be announced by the giant soft-drink maker. Last week, Coca-Cola announced the nationwide release of caffeine-free Coke Classic.

Charles R. Frenette, Coca-Cola's senior vice president for fountain sales, said PowerAde will be sold as a fountain product, primarily through convenience stores. There are no plans now to sell PowerAde in cans or bottles.

"It is important for Coca-Cola USA - as a full-service beverage supplier with the top fountain products in every major category - to be fully represented in the emerging sports drink segment," said Frenette.

PowerAde was given a four-month market test in Bakersfield, Calif. The lemon-flavored drink will compete with Gatorade's lemon-lime product. It will also be available in orange and fruit punch flavors.

Coca-Cola said the beverage is designed to rapidly replace body fluids lost through perspiration during physical exertion. Sports drink beverages are particularly popular among males, especially people active in sports or those whose work requires heavy physical labor, Coca-Cola said. Coca-Cola has sold a similar sports drink called Aquarius overseas since 1983.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The State Department recalled the American ambassador from Guatemala Monday to underscore U.S. concerns that the Guatemalan government is not taking effective action against increasing incidents of terrorism.

''Guatemala's democracy continues to be challenged by acts of terrorism and human rights abuses perpetrated by extremists who seek to undermine the democratically-elected civilian government,'' State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

''The United States government condemns these acts in the strongest terms and reiterates its fundamental support for the government of Guatemala and for the peaceful transition through open and free elections to a new civilian government next year.''

She did not identify those believed responsible for the acts of political violence. Since most of the recent victims have been left-wing, the presumption in Guatemala is that the terrorism is carried out by right-wing groups under the protection of the influential Guatemalan military.

She said that Ambassador Thomas Stroock, ''as the personal representative of the president of the United States in Guatemala, has repeatedly stated both privately and publicly that the prepetrators of acts of violence and human rights abuse must be brought to justice.''

She noted that those responsible for recent acts of violence have not been brought to trial.

''Given this situation,'' she said, ''the secretary of state has requested that Ambassador Stroock return to the United States to review the situation. Following his consultations, he will be returning to Guatemala to convey our concerns to President (Vinicio) Cerezo.''

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Congressional Budget Office said Monday that if the policies President Bush proposed in his fiscal 1991 budget were adopted, the budget deficit would be $131 billion - nearly $70 billion higher than Bush predicted.

The CBO, a bipartisan agency of Congress, said in a new report analyzing Bush's budget that about $26 billion of its higher deficit estimate resulted from its use of less optimistic economic assumptions about growth and interest rates than those used by Bush.

The remaining $44 billion of its higher deficit estimate is due primarily to the additional working capital needs of the Resolution Trust Corp., the new federal agency handling the savings and loan bailout. Bush's budget did not include these additional costs, the CBO said.

The CBO said that with the extra money for the RTC and using its less optimistic economic assumptions, ''the 1991 budget deficit under the president's policy proposals would be $131 billion, almost $70 billion higher than the administration's estimate'' of a fiscal 1991 deficit of about $61 billion.

The agency had earlier estimated the fiscal 1991 deficit at $138 billion but said it had revised that figure upward to about $160 billion due to the capital needs of the RTC in closing down failed thrifts.

However, the government's sale of the assets of closed thrifts will bring in revenue and help reduce the deficit in fiscal year 1992 and subsequent years, the CBO said.

The CBO estimated that Bush's policy proposals for fiscal 1991 would cut the deficit by about $30 billion next year, bringing it from an estimated $160 billion if current policies were maintained, to about $130 billion.

Under the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law, the fiscal 1991 deficit must be no higher than the law's $64 billion target. The Gramm-Rudman law requires that the budget be balanced by fiscal 1993.

But the CBO said that even if Bush's policy proposals are adopted, there will still be a $79 billion deficit in 1993. But the budget would nearly be balanced by 1995, the CBO said.

HOUSTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Oil and gas production from two fields in the North Sea operated by Conoco affiliates increased dramatically following the drilling of a horizontal well in each field, executives announced Monday.

Continental Netherlands Oil Company's Kotter oilfield in the Dutch sector of the North Sea doubled its production within one month as a result of one horizontal well completed from a previously abandoned production well.

Following a month of gradually increasing flow rate, the well stabilized at 12,000 barrels of oil a day, effectively doubling the Kotter field's production to about 25,000 barrel of oil a day.

Conoco (U.K.) Limited found in testing the gas production from a horizontal well in the North Valiant field that the rate was more than three times higher than conventional wells in the field. The production rate is expected to increase even more when the well is brought into full production.

Drilling horizontal to the earth's surface is allowing oil companies to reach oil deposits not readily reachable by normal vertial wells. The technique, however, costs twice as much.

"Horizontal drilling has given us a way to reach more oil and gas with fewer wells," said William K. Dietrich, Conoco executive vice president, international exploration and production.

"The new technology not only allows us to improve the productivity of existing fields, it also enables us to develop other North Sea reservoirs more efficiently in the future.

"This technology can greatly increase the production rate and amount of oil or gas recovered from reservoirs, especially those that are relatively thin or geologically complex," Dietrich said. "We plan to drill more horizontal wells this year."

The well drilled by Conoco (U.K.) Limited was the first horizontal well in the U.K. southern North Sea. It was drilled to a true vertical depth of 8,100 feet.

ANCHORAGE, AK (MARCH 5) UPI - Shouting rang out Monday in the trial of Joseph Hazelwood when a prosecution witness lost his temper at defense charges that he tailored his testimony to fit the scenario of recklesses that forms the basis of the case against the Exxon Valdez skipper.

''I did not blindly do what the state suggested,'' yelled the angry marine salvage expert, William Milwee. ''I arrived at the opinions independently, sir.

''They didn't tell me to say anything, sir,'' Milwee, barely controlling himself, shouted at defense lawyer Michael Chalos.

Milwee offered some of the most damaging testimony against Hazelwood, telling jurors that the skipper clearly tried to move the leaking, unstable tanker off the reef to certain disaster after it hit Bligh Reef last March 24 and leaked nearly 11 million gallons of oil.

But Chalos, using state documents, showed that prosecutors laid out the scenario of their case to Milwee first, then asked him to prepare an expert case that proved Hazelwood recklessly tried to move the tanker.

But the Portland, Ore. expert, repeatedly raising his voice in unconcealed anger, denied he fashioned his expert testimony to fit the predetermined conclusion of state prosecutors and said he developed his own independent support for prosecution charges that Hazelwood tried to rock the ship free.

Milwee was followed to the witness stand by another prosecution expert, naval architecture specialist William Vorus, who said if the Exxon Valdez ''had been extracted from the reef, our analysis shows that it would have capsized and sank.''

Milwee acknowledged under cross-examination, as have other expert witnesses, that the grounded tanker was incapable of budging off Bligh Reef, but that Hazelwood tried to drive it over the rocks to deep water.

Chalos delved into this concept, questioning whether Hazelwood could be reckless, risking the ship and crew and remaining oil, by trying to carry out the impossible.

Prosecutor Brent Cole maintained the risk of further damage was there and that the skipper's was reckless merely by trying to rock the stranded ship free - even if success was impossible.

Chalos said no risk existed since Hazelwood had no power to move the grounded ship, thus making it impossible to endanger the crew, ship and unbreached oil tanks.

''You can't have a susbstantial risk if it was impossible,'' defense lawyer Dick Madson said.

Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone has yet to rule whether jurors will be allowed to consider whether Hazelwood acted recklessly by trying to get the tanker off the reef. The defense maintains Hazelwood's actions were designed to keep the ship on the reef and prevent it from sliding off during an incoming tide.

Hazelwood, 43, of Huntington, N.Y., is charged with reckless endangerment, operating the tanker while intoxicated, negligent discharge of oil and criminal mischief. He faces up to seven years, three months in jail and a $61,000 fine.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell and Republican leader Robert Dole called President-elect Violeta Chamorro

Monday to pledge their support in sending economic aid to Nicaragua.

Mitchell said he wants to hear what Chamorro may propose, but he told her that ''we want to go forward and help.''

''We want to work with you on an economic aid package at the earliest time '' Dole said in the call to Managua, Nicaragua.

Mitchell, D-Maine, was an opponent of sending military aid to the Contra guerrillas that fought to overthrow the Soviet-supported Nicaraguan government. Dole, R-Kan., was an major supporter of the guerrillas.

The Contras fought for nearly a decade against the Sandinistas, but without significant success. But Chamorro achieved that at the ballot box on Feb. 25, defeating President Daniel Ortega 55 percent to 41 percent.

Chamorro's victory was widely praised in Washington, and the White House and the Congress are planning aid programs to help rebuild a Nicaraguan economy battered by a decade of civil war, a U.S. trade embargo, and the Contra war.

Chamorro invited Mitchell and Dole to her inauguration on April 25. The administration is expected to lift the U.S. trade embargo against Nicaragua by that time to permit its exports of fruit, coffee, and other products to the United States.

The two Senate leaders also invited Chamorro to visit Washington.

''You will receive a very warm reception,'' Mitchell said.

CAIRO, EGYPT (MARCH 5) UPI - Forensic scientists Monday identified through dental records an American couple killed during a blaze at a five-star hotel that claimed at least 19 lives, officials said.

The positive identification of Merver Bernstein and his wife, Sheva, brought to four the known number of Americans who died in the nine-hour fire, U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Marcelle Wahba said.

Bernstein, 70, of Washington, D.C., was president of Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., from 1972 to 1983. He went to Brandeis after serving 26 years as a professor and dean at Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public Policy and International Affairs. He most recently taught political science at Georgetown University in Washington.

In a separate development, Cairo's Ramses Hilton said Monday it removed as a ''fire risk'' an Arabic-style canvas tent that caught fire last year.

A tent fire was responsible for spreading the blaze early Thursday that gutted the Heliopolis Sheraton near Cairo, witnesses said.

''A fire broke out in a tent we were constructing inside the hotel last May, but there were no deaths or injuries, and we removed it as a fire risk,'' Ibrahim Atwa, duty manager at the Ramses Hilton hotel, told United Press International.

''We don't know why the Sheraton kept their tent,'' he said.

Management officials at the Heliopolis Sheraton rejected allegations that they ignored warnings their tent posed a fire risk. They said the Sheraton held permits for all its facilities including the tent.

The management also said fire alarms sounded shortly after the blaze, but survivors said they heard no fire alarms.

Egyptian ministry of tourism officials said Monday that foreign experts would be flown to Cairo to advise on stricter fire safety regulations.

Cairo's government-supervised newspapers, meanwhile, published excerpts of a preliminary interior ministry report blaming inadequate fire precautions for the high death toll in the fire.

Ten of the hotel's 650 rooms were still blocked by charred rubble Monday and rescuers feared more bodies would be found buried underneath. Officials also said the building was in danger of collapsing.

The hotel archives, destroyed in the blaze, further hampered rescue efforts by making authorities uncertain whether all victims have been accounted for.

The bodies of two other Americans, Robert D. Cresap, 67, a retired accountant from Houston, and Stephen Mohnike, 30, from Covena, California, an employee of Hughes aircraft, had been positively identified, Wahba said.

Three Britons, including two journalists, a Greek air hostess, eight French nationals, an elderly Finnish couple and an Egyptian girl are also known to have died in the blaze, a spokesman at Cairo's fire department said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Actress Elizabeth Taylor and artist Robert Rauschenberg brought the ''Art Against AIDS'' program to the nation's capital Monday, the latest in a series of fund-raising projects to help those afflicted with the deadly disease.

The project, sponsored by The American Foundation for AIDS Research, of which Taylor is chairwoman, was started in New York in June 1987, and similar fund-raisers have been held in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

''I've been involved in the fight against AIDS for a long time,'' Taylor said at a news conference. ''I've come face to face with this tragedy again and again.

'''Art Against AIDS' has mobilized many individuals to raise money for research and education. The money is put right to work here (in local communities). We don't give it to the government, we give it to real people.

''It's a joining together in a common project that will make a difference.''

The latest project, ''Art Against AIDS/Washington, D.C.,'' features several fund-raising events from March 18 through April 26, including appearances by performance artists Spalding Gray and Laurie Anderson.

So far, ''Art Against AIDS'' has raised more than $5 million. Patricia Kluge, co-chairwoman for the Washington, D.C., project, said it hopes to raise at least $1 million, and 50 percent of the net proceeds will go directly to several area organizations that provide clinical, social and educational help to those suffering with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Taylor, who is scheduled to appear Tuesday with Sens. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and New York Mayor David Dinkins to discuss legislation involving AIDS, said part of the reason for her involvement in the issue is because she sees a need for both private-sector and public funding.

''With a disaster as far-reaching as AIDS no government can cope alone,'' she said. ''The fight against AIDS cannot be left to any one sector of the population. It affects all of us.''

Earlier in the day, Taylor said she met with first lady Barbara Bush to discuss the issue, and would only say that Bush was ''very responsive.''

Rauschenberg, who has donated more than $500,000 worth of art works to the project, said artists should become involved in the issue because in one sense, they are ''reporters.''

''There are two kinds of artists,'' he said. ''Somebody who is a recluse, living a hermit-type life who does eccentric, isolated work. All other artists are reporters. ... They have to be the conscience of the country.''

But Rauschenberg did note that Washington seemed to be ''one of the toughest towns to try and raise money for AIDS.''

''Everybody's got their eye on each other,'' he said. ''People in Washington have to watch every word, every nuance. There is a sensitivity with AIDS, since it does include sex and (the subject) is an embarrassment to that kind of puritannical phobia.

''If you support any research for AIDS, you're not promoting sexual promiscuity.''

In that vein, Taylor called on the nation to provide an example for other countries that are beginning to be affected by the epidemic.

''Many countries are looking to us,'' she said. ''We need a solution and to assume a leadership position. People all around the world are waiting and suffering. It's not in the American tradition for us to disappoint them.''

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - As New York and New Jersey mop up more than a half-million gallons of oil spilled in the last three months, a government report concludes the oil industry and the Coast Guard are not prepared to cope with major spills at the New York and Philadelphia ports.

Last week, two separate incidents at Exxon facilities caused about 35,000 gallons of heavy oil to spill into New Jersey's main ports at Port Elizabeth and Port Newark. And in January, a spill at the Exxon Bayway refinery dumped 567,000 gallons of light heating oil into the Arthur Kill, which separates Staten Island from northeastern New Jersey.

Last June, the Presidente Rivera spilled 300,000 gallons of oil into the Delaware River.

And nearly one year ago, the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Alaska, dumping nearly 11 million gallons of oil into the pristine waters of Prince William Sound.

''We found that, similar to the situation in Prince William Sound, in the Philadelphia and New York ports, industry and the Coast Guard are not prepared to respond to major oil spills - over 100,000 gallons,'' a General Accounting Office report concluded.

''Industry and the Coast Guard cannot respond effectively to oil spills if they do not have the plans and resources necessary to do the job,'' the report said.

''Although recent Coast Guard assessments of response capabilities in the Philadelphia and New York ports raise questions about industry's ability to handle major spills in the area, the Coast Guard does not believe it has the authority necessary to ensure that adequate industry response preparations have been made,'' the report said.

About 76 vessels, each carrying between 840,000 to 25 million gallons of oil, are transported daily into the New York port, which serves New York and northeastern New Jersey. The Philadelphia port, serving the Delaware Bay and River, handles more than 70 percent of all oil entering the eastern United States.

The report said industry and Coast Guard response capabilities and preparations ''proved inadequate'' during the Presidente Rivera spill.

''It is questionable whether the preparedness for spills of similar size in the New York port or ... in the Philadelphia port area would be any better,'' the report said.

It critically noted that the New York port's contingency plan does not specifically identify the sizes of spills that could reasonably be expected to occur or what personnel and equipment would be required to respond to spills of various sizes.

The Philadelphia ports spill plan ''states that local resource capabilities could handle effectively spills of no more than 50,000 gallons,'' the report said.

Priority should be given to preventing spills and that a single entity within the federal government should adopt a leadership role, the report recommended.

The Exxon Valdez accident, the worst oil spill in U.S. history, sparked comprehensive legislation - now being debated in conference - imposing a wide array of requirements on industry and the government to prevent spills and ensure a speedy, coordinated response to future accidents.

The bill also would limit the liability of oil spillers for cleanup and compensation payments and set up a $1 billion industry-funded federal account to pay for any additional costs over those limits. The fund would be financed by a tax on oil.

SAN FRANCISCO (MARCH 5) UPI - The U.S. real estate industry is in for a tough year in 1990 as lingering inflation keeps interest rates high, the president of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco said Monday.

"Because the economy will continue to operate at a relatively high level, I would say real interest rates will remain high by historical standards," Robert Parry told about 1,000 real estate professionals at the Fairmont Hotel. "Clearly this will be a deterrent to real estate investment."

Although the residential real estate market is expected to bounce back from a weak performance in 1989, overbuilding in commercial and industrial markets will keep those sectors in the doldrums, Parry said. "Obviously this is not the rosiest picture you've ever seen," Parry told the annual Real Estate Investment Conference.

On the bright side, residential real estate buyers and lenders are no longer as sensitive to fluctuations in interest rates, Parry said. Previously, when interest rates rose, housing investment took a nosedive, he said.

But financial deregulation in the 1980s allowed many lenders more flexibilty to manage fluctuations in rates, he said. Before deregulation, banks and savings and loans were prevented from raising deposit rates during times of high interest rates, driving many investors into treasury bills and other investments that offered better returns. The result was a shortage of funds to lend, creating a credit crunch, he said.

Since the early 1980s, secondary mortgage markets have arisen to supplement traditional lenders such as banks and savings and loans. Adjustable rate mortgages allow lenders to protect themselves from rate changes and ensure a steady supply of mortgage credit, Parry said.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - The Dodge Index measuring construction activity was down 3 percent in January, the indicator's fourth consecutive monthly decline, according to the F.W. Dodge information service.

''The index slid another 3 percent in January to 155, extending the decline of this measure of newly started construction from its most recent peak of 181 in September,'' F.W. Dodge, a division of McGraw-Hill Inc., said in its latest report about the industry.

The seasonally adjusted Dodge Index, an indicator of future spending on construction, uses 1982 as its 100 base.

In January, non-residential building dropped 4 percent from December's levels, while non-building construction, which covers public works and utilities, was down 6 percent and newly started one-family homes and apartments eased 1 percent, F.W. Dodge said.

''The weakening of the construction activity that has set in over the past six months has a decidedly regional tilt to it,'' said George Christie, vice president of the information service.

''Virtually, all of the decline has been concentrated in two regions, the Northeast and the South Atlantic, both of which are coming off recent building booms,'' Christie said. ''By contrast, the Central and Western parts of the country are continuing to build at close to last year's rate.''

In seasonally adjusted annual rates, the total value of construction contracts in January stood at $244.3 billion, down from $251.4 billion in December.

Also in adjusted annual rates, non-residential building dropped to $83.75 billion from $87.16 billion in December, residential building eased to $115.97 billion from $117.07 billion, and non-building construction fell to $44.58 billion from $47.21 billion, F.W. Dodge said.

In unadjusted year-to-year figures, the value of construction contracts for the month of January was $16.47 billion, down 6 percent from $17.53 billion in January 1989.

On a year-to-date basis, non-residential building suffered the greatest decline, down 11 percent to $6.23 billion in January from $6.99 billion in the first month of 1989, and residential building was off 7 percent to $7.58 billion compared with $8.13 billion.

In contrast, non-building construction was up 10 percent in January to $2.65 billion from $2.4 billion in January 1989.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Jury selection is underway in Washington for John Poindexter's Iran-Contra trial. Former President Reagan's national security adviser watched as the questioning of potential jurors began today. One potential juror drew laughter with her recollection of what she heard about Reagan's advance testimony. In the woman's words- ''he said he couldN'T remember anything.''

A federal official says Republican National Committee Chairman Lee Atwater appears to be ''doing fine'' as he recovers from a fainting spell earlier today. Atwater passed out while speaking at a fund-raiser for Texas Senator Phil Gramm. A spokesman for Gramm says the 39-year-old Atwater was rushed to George Washington University... where he is said to be awake and undergoing tests.

The Supreme Court today ruled that telling juries to ignore sympathy when sentencing a person to die does NOT violate the Constitution. The ruling comes in an Oklahoma death penalty case in which jurors received instruction to ''avoid any influence of sympathy.'' The high court overturned an appeals court ruling that found such instruction goes against the eighth Amendment ban barring cruel and unusual punishment.

In the Philippines, government lawyers today asked the nation's highest court to uphold rebellion and murder charges against Juan Enrile , saying dismissing the case would be an ''authorization to barbarism.'' The opposition leader is scheduled to argue his case before the Supreme Court tomorrow. Enrile is accused of plotting to oust President Aquino last December.

(MARCH 5) UPI - South Africa says it moved troops into the nominally independent homeland of Ciskei today to guard government buildings and water installations. South Africa's foreign minister says security forces are trying to curb looting and arson in the wake of yesterday's bloodless coup. The popular rebellion ousted Lennox Sebe , who ruled the region with an iron hand since 1981.

Prominent West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians say the P-L-O must play a central role in the Middle East peace process, an idea Israel has rejected. The statement comes as Israel's ruling Likud Party meets today to consider a compromise U-S peace proposal. Likud Party members are under pressure from the opposition Labor Party and the United States to reach a decision regarding the peace plan.

New York Cardinal John O'Connor says Roman Catholic priests have performed two anti-devil exorcisms in New York recently. During yesterday's sermon at St. Patrick's Cathedral, O'Connor blamed heavy metal rock music for popularizing Satanic worship. When asked if the two exoricisms were successful, the cardinal replied- ''We hope so.''

JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA (MARCH 5) UPI - South African security forces moved into the independent homeland of Ciskei Monday to guard vital installations and curb violence that has left four dead in the wake of a military coup.

''The most immediate priority is to restore day-to-day life and law and order,'' said Brig. ''Oupa'' Josh Gqozo, a former military attache to Pretoria and coup leader who requested South African reinforcements a day after ousting President-for-life Lennox Sebe.

''We should not confuse political ideologies and aspirations with vandalism and criminal acts,'' Gqozo said.

Mobs in the industrial township of Mdantsane looted and set ablaze shops owned by businessmen associated with Sebe. Since Sunday's coup, more than 50 factories, a hotel and nearly dozen buses have been set on fire in Mdantsane and the township of Zwelitsha near the capital of Bisho.

Commercial activity came to a standstill and schools were closed. Rioters and several soldiers shouted ''Down with Sebe!'' While no deaths were reported when Gqozo took control early Sunday, doctors reported one Ciskeian shot and killed during looting and three others stabbed to death Monday.

Gqozo led the coup in Ciskei, the coastal territory of about 900,000, less than 48 hours after Sebe reportedly left on a trade mission to Taiwan. But there was widespread speculation in Bisho that Sebe fled after learning of his imminent overthrow.

Like other black homelands, which only South Africa recognizes as independent countries, Sebe's government has been accused of widespread corruption and human rights violations, including assassinations and torture of political activists opposed to the controversial homelands policy.

Since the release of black nationalist Nelson Mandela on Feb. 11, protests and violence within homelands has been surging, with opponents of the policy seeking reincorporation into South Africa.

The violence within Ciskei spilled over into the nearby South African township of Duncan Village Monday. Police used tear gas to disperse looters and ordered journalists out after declaring the township an operational area.

South Africa has pledged not to crush the popular rebellion in the homeland, where Sebe has ruled with an iron hand since the territory accepted Pretoria's offer of independence in 1981.

The government sent in security forces - ''significant units'' according to South African legislators - after reports of threats against South African government buildings and water installations, Foreign Minister Roelof ''Pik'' Botha told journalists.

Gqozo told reporters he had requested more reinforcements from South Africa and ''they've responded positively.'' Botha said reports from his staff indicated widespread support in the homeland for the military takeover.

At a rally in Bisho Stadium, Gqozo told a crowd of 1,000 people that the African National Congress and other political organizations outlawed in Ciskei would be accommodated in the future.

Appearing with Gqozo, the regional president of the ANC-aligned United Democratic Front welcomed the coup and called for an end to the violence.

''There is a big difference between anarchy and freedom,'' UDF regional President Mluleke George said. ''Freedom means discipline and accountability.''

Gqozo and three high-ranking military officers have formed the Council of State to run the country. The council includes Maj. Peter Paul Hauser, a 46-year-old former Austrian army officer with training in the South African air force who came to Ciskei in 1982.

Eighteen Cabinet ministers put under house arrest were freed Monday after the council relieved them of their duties.

Ciskei was the last of four homelands to accept independence under Pretoria's apartheid policy of creating separate citizenship for the country's black majority.

In December 1987 South African troops failed to intervene when the military in the homeland of Transkei took charge, but intervened a year later in Bophuthatswana to reinstate President Lucas Mangope after a similar coup.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Clarence Thomas, the conservative chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, was assured confirmation as a federal appeals court judge Monday when his leading critic conceded defeat.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who opposed the nomination, said, ''I'm prepared to concede that Mr. Thomas will be confirmed.''

A Senate vote on the nomination was scheduled Tuesday.

President Bush nominated Thomas, 41, for a lifetime seat on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, suceeding Robert Bork, who resigned after the Senate rejected his nomination by President Reagan to a seat on the Supreme Court.

The appeals court based in Washington is considered second only to the Supreme Court in power, since its jurisdiction includes federal agencies and their rules.

Although the Thomas nomination was once considered controversial and the Judiciary Committee held extensive deliberations, he was endorsed by the panel 17-1, with only Metzenbaum dissenting.

Metzenbaum, who also voted against Thomas' reconfirmation as chairman of the EEOC in 1986, said his opposition was not based on political philosphy but on Thomas' legal ability and background.

The Ohio Democrat said Thomas' answers to questions during nomination hearings, showed that he did not know ''crucial, fundamental laws'' dealing with federal and state reponsibilities in age discrimination cases.

''He didn't know what the law was,'' Metzenbaum said. ''To me it's incredible. How could he be head of an agency and not know the law as it pertains to the federal and state agencies?''

But Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, said, ''There's just some misunderstanding of this matter.''

Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, John Danforth, R-Mo., and Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., were among the senators who praised Thomas, who began his career in politics and government service in Missouri.

Hatch, ranking Republican on the Senate committee with jurisdiction over the EEOC, called Thomas ''a truly remarkable young man.

''He is one of the finest men in government. Clarence Thomas embodies the American dream. I am convinced Clarence Thomas will be an outstanding judge.''

And Metzenbaum, after conceding the Senate will approve Thomas, said, ''I hope my judgment and conclusion will be proven wrong.''

PRETORIA, SOUTH AFRICA (MARCH 5) UPI - A senior intelligence officer denied knowledge Monday of plots attributed to a secret agency within the South African military to poison or kill apartheid opponents.

Also on the opening day of an inquiry into political assassinations, a lawyer for the secret Civil Cooperation Bureau revealed that the chief of the unit had been arrested and held under for interrogation for ''criminal investigations.''

Lt. Col. Witkop Badenhorst, chief of staff military intelligence and the inquiry's first witness, said he was not aware of the CCB until November.

Justice Louis Harms, conducting the one-man inquiry, heard more evidence of CCB involvement in two bombings, alleged misappropriation of defense force funds and a plan to harass Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu by planting a monkey fetus outside his home.

President Frederik de Klerk ordered the unprecedented inquiry in January.

Tim McNally, the investigating state attorney, told Harms that police had compiled a list of 71 cases of ''unsolved allegedly politically inspired murders'' and presented it as the inquiry's first piece of evidence.

Last week, de Klerk expanded the scope of the Harms Commission to probe claims by Defense Minister Magnus Malan that an assassinated white SWAPO activist, Anton Lubowski, was a paid military informant for South Africa while working with guerrillas fighting South African rule in Namibia.

The CCB, secretly formed within the South African Defense Force in 1987, has been linked to the 1989 deaths of Lubowski and another prominent white human rights lawyer, David Webster.

De Klerk said last week he only learned of the CCB's existence in January when Malan informed him about the unit and allegations against it.

Maj. Gen. Eddie Webb, the officer named as in direct command of CCB head Joe Verster, denied allegations that the secret unit was involved in Webster's slaying in Johannesburg, five months before Lubowski's death in Namibia.

''The tasks or projects of the CCB include to infiltrate enemy networks, to collect information and to distribute it according to the determined channels, to perform specific specialist tasks which could not be performed or executed by other branches of the special forces,'' Webb said.

Lawyers representing the South African Police, the military and the Webster and Lubwoski families were among the observers during the first session of the Harms' Commission. The inquiry is expected to continue for several months.

McNally also asked Webb about plans to tamper with luggage belonging to the Rev. Frank Chikane, secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches, and to substitute heart pills used by Cape Town anti-apartheid lawyer Dullah Omar, legal adviser to Nelson Mandela, for tablets that would bring on a heart attack. Webb denied any knowledge of such plots.

McNally also asked Webb why Gavin Evans, a journalist for the Weekly Mail, had been under surveillance and whether there were plans to kill him. Webb said he had no knowledge pertaining to McNally's questions.

Malan, who faces calls for his resignation after reports of high-level military complicity in the death squad allegations, is among the witnesses human rights attorneys want to testify before Harms.

''There's no reason why (the commission) shouldn't be able to find out who the involved parties are,'' said Brian Currin, a lawyer for the independent Human Rights Commission. "Today and tomorrow we will be just scratching the surface."

During the first session of the Harms Commission, Badenhorst reported on an internal military investigation that he said revealed that the CCB had been involved in bomb blasts against the Cape Youth Congress Center and a shop owned by an anti-apartheid activist.

The CCB also was involved in a plan to send a monkey fetus to Tutu, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and a proponent of non-violent pressure to end apartheid.

At the end of Badenhorst's testimony, P.A. Hattingh a lawyer for the CCB, asked Harms to delay his cross-examination of the chief of military intelligence until he could confer with Verster.

Hattingh told Harms that Verster had been arrested Friday and was being held under the International Security Act's Section 29, under which a person may be detained for an indefinite period for the purpose of interrogation.

Brig. Floris Mostert, head of the Brixton murder and robbery squad, ordered Verster's arrest in connection with ''criminal investigations," Hattingh said. In court papers last month, Mostert linked the CCB to the Lubowski and Webster slayings.

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM (MARCH 5) UPI - The ''two-plus-four'' process on German unity will begin this week with official talks between the two Germanys, and the four victorious Allies of World War II joining next week, West Germany's foreign minister said Monday.

Previously it was believed the talks would not begin until after the March 18 elections in East Germany.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said East and West Germany will meet at the ''official'' level on unification later this week and the Big Four allies - Britain, France, the United States and the Soviet Union - will join the talks next week.

Genscher, attending a meeting of European Community foreign ministers, said the meetings would be the first official talks on German unification since the ''two-plus-four'' process was established in Ottawa last month.

He did not give further details, but a spokesman for the EC president later said representatives of the two Germanys would meet Friday, followed by extended talks with the Big Four on March 14.

The East German news agency said the early talks on German unification would force postponement of a March 17 meeting of the Warsaw Pact scheduled for Prague, Czechoslovakia, at least until late in the month.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd, who attended a private briefing by Genscher for foreign ministers, said the ''two-plus-four'' talks would begin soon, but also gave no details.

Hurd met earlier with NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner, and the two ''agreed on the desirability'' of an early April meeting of NATO foreign ministers on German unification, but no date was set, said a spokeswoman for Britain's NATO delegation.

In the restricted session with foreign ministers, Genscher sought to reassure EC and NATO partners they would be consulted on all aspects of German unification, according to Hurd and Belgian Foreign Minister Mark Eyskens.

''He gave the assurance that Germany doesn't want to create facts and tell the other parties to accept it,'' Eyskens said.

Since Ottawa, several NATO countries, notably Italy and Holland, have expressed concern over being left out of the ''two-plus-four'' process.

Hurd said, however, ''there was no repetition today of the complaints, the criticisms that were raised. ... I think we felt we were being kept in the picture.''

Eyskens said Genscher also told his colleagues that German unification, and presumably incorporation of East Germany into the European Community, would not require a revision of the EC's founding document, the 1957 Treaty of Rome.

Genscher declined to discuss with reporters a rift with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl over the question of Poland's western border.

In Paris, French President Francois Mitterrand said that the frontier between Poland and a reunified Germany along the Oder-Neisse line should be established through an international agreement.

Mitterrand, who made his comment during a meeting with Czechoslovakian National Assembly President Alexander Dubcek, will reiterate his position when Polish leaders visit France on Friday.

Dubcek told Mitterrand that Czechoslovakia supported his position on the German-Polish border, adding that his country was not opposed to German reunification as long as it was done within a process of European integration.

EC heads of state will meet in Dublin, Ireland, on April 28 in a special summit to discuss German unification. The leaders had been scheduled to meet next in June, but decided to hold an extraordinary session when the pace toward German unity heated up.

BOISE, Idaho (MARCH 5) UPI - The state House of Representatives postponed consideration Monday of a bill that would give Idaho the most restrictive abortion law in the nation.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. L. Ed Brown, a Republican, would prohibit abortion as a means of birth control. The House, bogged down on a school funding proposal, is now scheduled to consider the bill Tuesday afternoon.

It will be considered on General Orders, meaning it could be amended in many ways.

The bill would make all abortions illegal in Idaho except in cases of rape incest, profound fetal physical or mental disability, or threats to the life or the health of the mother.

Supporters believe it would halt up to 93 percent of abortions in Idaho, but opponents argue that it contains a wide range of constitutional flaws.

The bill is viewed with hope by the National Right to Life Committee, which helped draft it, as possibly the test case that could overturn the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe vs. Wade, which legalized abortion nationwide.

''It's a National Right to Life bill,'' said the Rev. James Hulett, a Boise pastor and head of a newly-formed abortion rights advocacy group called Freedom Means Choice.

''The other thing is, there are a lot of people concerned about the constitutionality of it,'' Hulett said. ''The third thing is, it just isn't fair to Idaho women or their families.''

Hulett said if the bill is passed it would cost Idaho a lot of money to defend in court.

''This will be in direct conflict with Roe vs. Wade, so there will be some kind of constitutional procedure to test it,'' Hulett said. ''The state that passes the bill will have to pay the bill.

''They (National Right to Life Committee) want to see how far this thing will go,'' Hulett said. ''It's outsiders coming in and telling Idaho people what to do.''

MOSCOW (MARCH 5) UPI - Lithuania's Sajudis nationalist movement overwhelmingly clinched control of the Baltic republic's Parliament in runoff elections, setting up a confrontation with Moscow over independence official results showed Monday.

The official news agency Tass, quickly reporting the results of the run-off elections held Sunday, said 18 more Sajudis candidates were elected, which added to the 70 nationalists elected Feb. 24 in the first round.

The latest win gives candidates backed by the pro-independence Sajudis movement 88 seats, or a majority of the 141-member legislature.

So far, 116 seats have been filled in the two elections. Further balloting is set for March 7 and 8 for the other 25 seats, but Tass said that the ''Sajudis already controls almost two-thirds of the seats.''

A spokesman for the movement, Dajus Greenbergas, said the legislators are planning to gather for the first session of the new Parliament on March 11 the day before the Congress of People's Deputies meets in Moscow.

At that Congress session, President Mikhail Gorbachev is expected to reveal his plan for a mechanism that would allow republics like Lithuania to secede. Lithuania was annexed by Moscow in 1940.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Leading House defense advocates said Monday the Budget Committee will demand at least $8 billion in Pentagon budget cuts, a figure the Army's top general said could be devastating.

The Budget Committee Tuesday will hear from Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, on how much of the proposed defense budget should be approved, and both Aspin and Rep. Marvin Leath, D-Texas, who serves on both panels, said the cuts could be large.

''None of us like to play the 'what if' game,'' said Leath in asking Gen. Carl Vuono, the Army's chief of staff, what the impact of additional cuts would be.

''I would suspect if we can hold that cut to $8 billion some of us will feel that we've accomplished some degree of a victory,'' said Leath.

''It would be devastating to us,'' said Vuono, whose service might have have to absorb as much as half of the cut. ''You would be back to fracturing the force.''

Leath said he wished the $8 billion figure were hypothetical, and Aspin quickly added, ''It's not far off what's being kicked around.''

The proposed Pentagon budget totals $306.9 billion, with actual spending or ''outlays'' of $303.9 billion, with $11.9 billion of that for nuclear weapons programs at the Energy Department, meaning Pentagon spending alone under Leath's figure would fall from a budgeted $292 billion to $284 billion. Personnel accounts would suffer hardest under heavy cuts because most of the money in those accounts is spent each year, while only a small amount of the amount authorized for a weapons system often is spent in a year.

Under the congressional budget process, the Budget committees of the House and Senate set overall spending levels, and the Armed Services committees then write defense authorization bills to parallel those figures. Defense Appropriations subcommittees for each chamber then write legislation dealing with actual spending for the fiscal year.

Vuono also said that the Army is working on plans for use if necessary trying to cut back its force by 35,000 slots a year over five years after 1991 - the budget now under consideration - and that drawing down the force any faster could leave units undermanned and readiness suffering.

''I think the political requirement is going to be to bring that down a lot quicker than that,'' cautioned Aspin.

The conventional arms control talks in Europe now envision the United States reducing its forces in Europe by about 80,000 positions over three years, but Aspin said politics may demand a far faster reduction.

''I just want to tell you you've got to start looking at bringing down the size of the Army a lot faster than 35,000 a year,'' he told Vuono at an Armed Services Committee session.

Rep. David Martin, R-N.Y., said large-scale cutbacks in the size of U.S. forces could equate to ''the biggest plant closing since the Great Depression.''

(MARCH 5) UPI - The Supreme Court ruled today that North Carolina's death penalty sentencing law includes requirements that are unconstitutional. The state's sentencing law requires jurors to agree unanimously that the same two mitigating circumstances exist in a murderer's case. The court found the law violates the eighth Amendment against cruel and unusual punishment by NOT permitting jurors to consider evidence they believe calls for a sentence less than death.

Former national security adviser John Poindexter is in court today, observing the jury selection process for his Iran-Contra trial. 12 jurors and six alternates must be chosen before testimony can begin. One potential juror was a young woman who practices real estate law and knows a lawyer on Poindexter's trial team. She said she could be impartial, and despite objections from prosecuting attorney Dan Webb, the judge found her qualified to serve on the jury.

The House Intelligence Committee is investigating reported links between the C-I-A and several failed savings and loans institutions. The staff director for the congressional panel says the committee ''will be looking into'' allegations that the agency engaged in fraud at some S-and-L's to fund covert activities. The C-I-A has dismissed the reports as ''without foundation.''

The Colombian Defense Ministry says weekend violence left 18 people dead in Bogota. Officials say leftist rebels detonated a bomb in the path of a Colombian army patrol and opened fire on the soldiers. 13 soldiers died and the surviving troops shot and killed five guerrillas. Yesterday's incident is being called the year's worst attack against the army and appears to be part of a rebel offensive against the government in an effort to sabotage Sunday's congressional elections.

SOFIA, BULGARIA (MARCH 5) UPI - More than 3,000 ethnic Turks held a silent vigil outside the capitol building Monday as Parliament approved legislation guaranteeing them the right to keep their Moslem names.

The measure, passed unanimously, gives a legal basis to the communist government's efforts to reverse a decade of official persecution of Bulgaria's Turkish-speaking Moslem minority.

Former hard-line leader Todor Zhivkov forced thousands of Moslems to adopt Bulgarian names and imprisoned hundreds who resisted as part of his program of forced assimiliation.

''The use of threat, coercion, fraud or abuse of power or other unlawful action in the choice, retention, change or readoption of a name is a punishable offense,'' the new law reads.

About 1,000 ethnic Turks gathered outside the National Assembly building in the afternoon to await the outcome of the vote. By dusk the crowd had swelled to 3,000 people, most of them sitting or standing quietly in small groups.

After the legislation passed unanimously on its first reading, members of Parliament went outside to speak to the demonstrators, telling them the bill's final adoption was assured and they could all go home. But the crowd dispersed only after the measure was given final approval, well after nightfall.

The action comes nearly two months after the National Assembly, following the recommendation of the Communist Party, adopted a resolution declaration that all Bulgarians have the right to freely choose a name.

The law adopted Monday states that anyone who had his name forcibly changed under Zhivkov can legally readopt his old name under a ''facilitated administrative procedure'' until the end of 1990, the official news agency BTA. After that, names can be legally changed only in court.

In another development, the Parliament debated a proposed 1990 budget that includes a 11 percent cut in public spending.

Finance Minister Belcho Belchev said the draft plan calls for massive cuts in administration costs, to be realized through layoffs of office and managerial personnel.

Belchev said the cuts were consistent with the government's program of economic decentralization and reform. But he warned the period of transition would be painful for many.

The finance minister said Bulgaria's gross national product is expected to decline 4.4 percent in 1990, and income levels will drop by 3.7 percent.

SAN FRANCISCO (MARCH 5) UPI - A federal judge took his place on the witness stand rather than the bench Monday, testifying in his trial on charges of racketeering and obstruction of justice.

U.S. District Judge Robert Aguilar, a graying, rotund San Jose jurist, took the witness stand carrying a huge stack of papers and files, then began his testimony with a long, detailed account of his life as one of 11 children of migrant workers.

He portrayed himself as selflessly dedicated to work, family and study during a career that led to an appointment to the federal bench by President Carter in May 1980.

Aguilar's lawyers said he may be the only defense witness. U.S. District Judge Louis Bechtle, presiding over the case, refused to dismiss the charges after the prosecution rested, ruling there was sufficient evidence to submit the case to a jury.

Aguilar, 58, faces eight counts involving alleged use of his judicial office in an effort to influence two other judges in the handling of two criminal cases, lying to the FBI and disclosing wiretap information to a convicted felon.

Aguilar is the nation's first federal judge to be charged with racketeering and the fourth federal jurist indicted since 1980.

He faces 55 years in prison and $2 million in fines if convicted on all counts. He could also face congressional impeachment and removal from his lifetime post.

Indicted along with Aguilar on June 13, 1989, were Rudy Tham, 66, a convicted embezzler and Abe Chapman, 83, a convicted heroin dealer of the 1930s and self-proclaimed mob assassin of that era. Chapman is distantly related to Aguilar by marriage.

Defense lawyers for Aguilar contend he was targeted by overzealous FBI agents and government prosecutors because he has made a number of controversial rulings upsetting to the government.

The government contends Aguilar's motive was, in part, to get a warehouse job for his brother Lou Aguilar, a recovering alcoholic.

Aguilar is accused of contacting U.S. District Judge Stanley Weigel, at the urging of Chapman, in an effort to aid Tham in getting his 1980 embezzlement conviction overturned.

The judge also allegedly attempted to contact U.S. District Judge Sam Conti about Aguilar's longtime friend Ronald Cloud, a Fresno multimillionaire later convicted in a $20 million bank fraud involving the sale of Cal-Neva Casino at Lake Tahoe.

Aguilar, using his nephew as a conduit, allegedly told Chapman in August 1987 and February 1988 that Chapman's telephones might have been tapped by the FBI.

U.S. District Judge Robert Peckham testified he told Aguilar that Chapman's name had come up in connection with an FBI application to wiretap.

The tap involved Tham's telephone. Chapman was never wiretapped.

In some of the most attention-getting moments of a trial that began Feb. 6 all three federal judges - Peckham, Conti and Weigel - testified about their exchanges with Aguilar.

Aguilar is also accused of aiding his former secretary Vera Hoff to remain a fugitive in Mexico to avoid serving her six-month prison term for tax evasion.

OTTAWA (MARCH 5) UPI - A woman who suffered a total memory loss after being subjected to brainwashing experiments nearly 30 years ago is suing the government for compensation because it funded the experiments, her lawyer said Monday.

Linda Macdonald underwent so-called de-patterning experiments at a Montreal psychiatric hospital, according to her lawyer, Thomas Berger.

The experiments included more than 100 massive electroshock treatments, prolonged drug-induced sleep for 86 days and intensive ''psychic driving'' in which she was forced to listen to a continuos repetition of words and phrases intended to alter her mind, Berger said.

Similar experiments, also carried out at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal under Dr. Ewen Cameron, were funded by the CIA and the Canadian government. Although the CIA had stopped funding the experiments in 1962, a year before Macdonald entered the hospital, Berger said the Canadian government continued to provide money for the experiments.

In 1988 the CIA agreed to pay about $100,000 to each of nine Canadians who had undergone the jointly sponsored experiments.

The brainwashing experiments, according to Berger, were conducted so that Britain, the United States and Canada could ''catch up'' with brainwashing techniques being used by hostile governments on prisoners of war.

Berger said his client never gave her consent for the experiments, but believed they were to cure her of schizophrenia.

Macdonald, who was 25 at the time and the mother of five children, said the experiments stripped her of all memory. She was destitute and suicidal when she left the hospital and later lost custody of her children.

''I was like a child,'' Macdonald said. Since then, the plaintiff said, ''I learned how to play the guitar again. I learned how to cook. I had no sense of responsibility.''

Berger said he is uncertain how many other patients underwent similar experiments funded by the Ottawa government. The government has so far refused to pay compensation to any victims of the brainwashing experiments including those who settled out of court with the CIA.

Berger said he has filed a claim for an unspecified amount of damages on behalf of his client, but has agreed not to take further steps until Canadian justice officials study the case.

DAYTON, OH (MARCH 5) UPI - A former gynecologist whose controversial ''love surgery'' to alter women's genitals was detailed in a 1988 CBS broadcast filed a $250 million libel suit Monday against the network.

The suit, filed by James Burt in U.S. District Court, said the October 1988 segment on ''West 57th Street'' was a character assassination that destroyed his professional reputation.

''I want to be heard as to the truth about my vaginal surgery,'' Burt, 68, said, adding he was writing a book about his procedure.

''I think an important aspect of all this is that my informed consent procedures have been well above community standards, and the statements on West 57th Street to the contrary were direct lies.''

CBS reported on Burt's 1975 book, ''Surgery of Love,'' in which he said his surgery to rearrange women's genitals would enhance their sexual enjoyment to turn them into ''horny little mice.'' He said in the book he performed thousands of such operations beginning in 1966, sometimes without telling the women.

The hospital where he was a surgeon, St. Elizabeth Medical Center, said the 170 ''love surgeries'' Burt performed there were all with patient consent.

''We believe that the report was entirely fair and accurate and CBS News stands by it,'' CBS spokesman Tom Goodman said. ''We'll refrain from further comment until we've seen the lawsuit.''

Burt surrendered his license to practice medicine in Ohio in January 1989 after the Ohio State Medical Board charged him with 41 offenses ranging from over-prescribing painkillers to performing unnecessary operations.

Named as defendants along with the network in the libel suit were Vickie Samuels, producer of the West 57th segment, and reporter Karen Burnes.

The suit also named Sandra Shockey of New Lebanon, Ohio, who said Burt performed vaginal reconstruction surgery on her without her consent. In fact, the suit claims, Burt helped Shockey's physician to perform a Caesarean section on her.

''She characterized myself with Auschwitz concentration camp experiments during World War II,'' Burt said in a statement.

''The ... ludicrous and horrendous programming of the segment concerning the love doctor and his love surgery started a chain reaction of talk shows, magazine articles and media reports that have since totally destroyed my professional life, my reputation as a physician, loss of property, loss of income, my family.

''It has resulted in lawsuits requesting more than $100 million being filed against me.''

The fifth and final defendant is Dr. Bradley Busacco of Cincinnati, who ''referred to Burt as 'Frankenstein' and expressed 'horror and outrage' in discussing (Burt) with TV reporter Karen Burnes,'' the suit said.

Busacco, the suit said, also defamed Burt by referring to him as an unscrupulous physician who ''took advantage of the majority of patients'' who walked into his office.

Busacco performed reversal surgery to correct damage to patients caused by Burt, said Lee Sambol, a lawyer representing 42 women in suits against Burt.

In some cases, the surgery caused sexual dysfunction, emotional distress, infection, chronic pain, incontinence and the need for corrective surgery, the medical board charged.

''He never did the same surgery twice on anybody, because he was experimenting and, in fact, didn't know what he was doing,'' Sambol said.

Busacco declined comment, saying he had not seen the suit. Shockey could not be reached.

The suit claims CBS failed to obey a Federal Communications Commission personal attack rule, which says that when a licensee broadcasts an attack upon the honesty, character, integrity or personal qualities of someone, it must notify the party, send a transcript or accurate summary of the broadcast, and offer an opportunity for response.

LYON, FRANCE (MARCH 5) UPI - A criminal court agreed Monday to allow French author and socialite Francoise Sagan to testify from her home at her trial on charges of consuming and transporting cocaine.

The court accepted Sagan's argument that she could not attend the trial for health reasons.

Sagan, whose many best sellers include ''Bonjour Tristesse,'' was indicted on the drug charges in March 1988, not long before the French presidential election that took place in April and May of that year.

The author and her attorneys contend that the indictment was politically motivated by the conservative government of former Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, in an effort to embarass the Socialists with whom the author is close. Chirac was handily defeated by President Francois Mitterrand in the election.

In a radio interview shortly after her indictment, Sagan openly admitted she has used cocaine from time to time, but denied she was involved in drug trafficking.

''On occasion, I have taken a little cocaine, like a lot of people,'' she said, ''but to go from that to dragging me into court, that makes me hallucinate.''

Sagan came into the limelight suddenly with her 1954 novel ''Bonjour Tristesse,'' or Good Day, Sadness, written when she was only 18. Since that time, her books and essays have been consistent best sellers in France.

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (MARCH 5) UPI - The Contra rebels said Monday they will lay down their arms only after President-elect Violeta Chamorro takes office and called on her to demilitarize Nicaragua.

Also Monday, Chamorro's National Opposition Union, or UNO, resumed talks with the Sandinista government over the transfer of power to UNO.

Despite international calls for the Contras to disarm immediately after Chamorro's Feb. 25 election, the rebels will wait until Chamorro is sworn in on April 25, said Aristides Sanchez, a member of the Contra Political-Military Commission.

''We are going to put down our arms under the new government,'' Sanchez told United Press International in a telephone interview from Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

''Our exact position is that we will deliver our arms to Mrs. Violeta (Chamorro) and we will work to achieve this ... We will not deliver our arms to the CIAV or any foreign country,'' Sanchez said, referring to the joint Oganization of American States-United Nations Commission charged with overseeing Contra demobilization.

Sanchez also said the Contras would not disarm until Defense Minister Humberto Ortega and Interior Minister Tomas Borge resign their posts.

Following Chamorro's victory over President Daniel Ortega, Chamorro called for the Contras to disarm immediately and Ortega declared a cease-fire with the rebels.

Chamorro has also named a three-man team to meet with the Contras in Honduras on Tuesday to discuss demobilization. About 10,000 Contras, who have waged an eight-year war against the Sandinistas, are based in camps along the Honduran-Nicaraguan border.

In a press release, the Contras also called on Chamorro to work towards a national reconciliation and to demilitarize Nicaragua.

''It is fundamental that the country be demilitarized,'' said the statement, which was signed by Cristobal Sobalbarro, known as ''Commander Ruben'' of the rebel high command.

The statement also said the Contras have begun to taken steps towards disbanding, such as establishing contacts with UNO and the CIAV.

''The resistance (Contras), conscious that in an authentic democratic process it has to to modify its role as an insurgent army to political and civic activities, has started to take the necessay steps towards demobilization,'' the Contra statement said.

Luis H. Guzman, a UNO deputy-elect to the National Assembly, said talks resumed Monday between UNO and the Sandinistas to discuss the transfer of power to Chamorro following 10 years of Sandinista rule.

Luis Carrion, a member of the Sandinista Directorate and minister of commerce, was quoted Monday in Barricada, the official Sandinista newspaper, as saying the talks would be ''very serious and delicate.''

He also said the security of Nicaragua depends on keeping the Sandinista Popular Army and the Ministry of Defense intact.

''The security of the country depends on the integrity of the army and the Defense Ministry and UNO must recognize this,'' Carrion told Barricada.

The flexibility of the two sides in the transition talks will be a big factor in whether Nicaragua begins a new era of peace or chaos, Carrion said.

Last week, the two sides met for three days of talks headed by Humberto Ortega and Chamorro adviser Antonio Lacayo, but the talks were marked by differences over the structure and control of the 70,000-member army and the police.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Profit taking and computerized program selling snapped the stock market's five-day winning streak Monday as prices closed lower in moderate trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which jumped 24.77 Friday, fell 10.81 to close at 2649.55, the first down day since Feb. 23.

Among broader market gauges, the New York Stock Exchange composite index lost 0.82 to 184.15 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.80 to 330.74. The price of an average share slipped 15 cents.

Declines led advances 826-671 among the 1,971 issues crossing the NYSE tape. Big Board volume was 141,260,000 shares, compared with 164,330,000 shares traded Friday.

Analysts said a weak bond market and dollar sparked profit taking on the opening. Computerized program selling, used to profit on price differences between stocks and stock-index futures, exacerbated the drop, they said.

The weakness was interrupted by a slight rally on institutional buying, which has been tepid in recent weeks, but then the concerns about the bond market and dollar resurfaced, they said.

Treasury notes and bonds were down as much as 1 1/8 points in late trading. The dollar was sharply lower in late trading, changing hands at 1.6975 marks and 149.30 yen compared with 1.7150 and 150.15 late Friday.

"Even though the market was down, it's in the context of the Dow being up 96 points last week," said Eugene Peroni, Jr., chief technical analyst at Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in Philadelphia.

"It's encouraging. The market seems to be digesting its gains in an orderly manner," he said. "I think the market wants to work higher." Peroni said there seemed to be a lot of bidding for stocks at or just below market prices and also noted that volume in Monday's decline was quite light.

On the trading floor, Texas Utilities was the most active issue, down 3/8 to 34 3/8 in dividend-related trading.

American Express followed, tumbling 1 7/8 to 27 1/2 after saying Sunday it would buy all the publicly held shares of its brokerage firm, Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

The move is a complete turnaround for American Express, which for months has been seeking to reduce its 68 percent stake in the Wall Street investment bank's common shares. Shearson was down 5/8 to 11 7/8. Philip Morris was third, up 1/2 to 37 3/8.

Among the other blue chips, General Electric was down 5/8 to 61 3/4 and AT&T lost 1/2 to 39 7/8, both in heavy trading; IBM was up 1/8 at 105 and United Technologies gained 1/2 to 52 1/4.

Elsewhere, Great American Bank jumped 1/2 to 4 1/4. The San Diego bank said it has filed the additional information requested by the Office of Thrift Supervision and denied that its capital plan has been rejected, as the Wall Street Journal reported last Friday.

Motorola lost 1 5/8 to 61 3/8 after introducing a new line of computer systems, as it was expected to do. The stocks surged last week in anticipation of the move.

Pfizer tumbled 2 3/8 to 59 3/8. An analyst reportedly was contacted by a group of former employees who said they would allege the company had covered up problems with a defective heart valve. Other analysts did not report being contacted by the group, however.

Nord Resources jumped 1 1/8 to 14 5/8. It will reportedly begin producing a new line of kaolin products, used in paper manufacturing, later this month. Alltel dropped 1 3/4 to 30 7/8. It has agreed to acquire Systematics in a stock swap.

Lone Star Industries sank two to 15 1/4. The company declined to comment on the activity in its stock.

Volume of NYSE-listed issues, including trades in stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 168,644,810 shares, compared with 174,792,910 shares traded in the previous session.

Prices closed slightly higher in moderate trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex Market Value index rose 0.52 to close at 356.64. Advances led declines 282-250 among the 789 issues traded. The price of an average share rose two cents. Composite volume totaled 14,095,120 shares, compared with 17,321,980 shares traded Friday.

Bolar Pharmaceutical led the Amex issues, up one to six. The company, the subject of a government probe of its generic drugs, has approved a stock buyback. Reports also said it had temporarily closed its manufacturing plants and laid off 117 workers pending completion of the investigation.

The National Association of Securities Dealers composite index lost 0.87 to 430.15.

LONDON (MARCH 5) UPI - Britain will ban the discharge of raw sewage from coastal towns and the dumping of sewage sludge into the North Sea by 1998, Environment Secretary Chris Patten said Monday, seeking to change Britain's image as the ''dirty man of Europe.''

Only Britain continues the practice of large scale dumping of sewage sludge, and other European countries have been pushing Britain to stop within five years.

''It clearly demonstrates the United Kingdom's commitment to improving the quality of the North Sea and our coastal waters,'' Patten said.

The annoucement came as the government prepared to go to an international conference on the North Sea this week at The Hague.

The Third North Sea Conference includes all North Sea states - Britain, The Netherlands, Sweden, West Germany, Belgium, France, Norway and Denmark plus the European Community.

This year Switzerland and observers from Czechoslovakia and East Germany also will attend.

Greenpeace, the international environmental group, said the announcement ''means that the U.K. will dump 50 million tons of contaminated sewage sludge into the North Sea over the next eight years.

''The environment demands an end to this dirty practice now. What is needed is the political committment to end dumping immediately. Eight years is eight years too late,'' said Paul Horsman, North Sea campaigner for Greenpeace.

Patten said in future all significant discharges of sewage should be treated before being discharged into estuarial or coastal waters.

John Gummer, minister of agriculture, fisheries and food, said the government is encouraging the development of ways to dispose of sludge on land.

More than 25 percent of the 10 million tons of sludge produced in Britain annually is dumped at sea, the rest is incinerated, used as fertilizer or burned.

''We shall proceed as rapidly as possible. But some dumping will need to continue until new facilities are ready. We intend to have finished all dumping by the end of 1998,'' Patten said.

He also said marine incineration of wastes will be phased out by the end of 1990.

DETROIT (MARCH 5) UPI - A 7.9 percent decline in sales of domestically built cars and trucks during late February caused U.S. vehicle sales for the entire month to slip 4.7 percent from year-ago levels, automakers said Monday.

Sales of domestically built cars during the latest month slipped 3.5 percent from last year when measured by sales per day. Light truck sales declined 6.7 percent.

Sales of imported cars declined 2.3 percent to an estimated 192,500 cars vs. 197,000 in the year-ago month. But their share of the total U.S. car market last month rose slightly to 26.5 percent, from 26.3 percent.

The annual sales rate for domestically built cars during February - the most common measure of industry performance - was a weak 6.8 million cars during the period, compared with 7.3 million last year.

"It looks like something is going to have to give as far as enhancing buyer incentives are concerned," said industry analyst Thomas O'Grady, of Integrated Automotive Resources Inc. in Wayne, Pa. "Sales are very weak and consumers just aren't responding to anything going on now, so if they are not working maybe they should be lowered or taken off."

While production estimates show major manufacturers plan to scale back output from year-ago levels, the latest reports show no substantial cuts - indications carmakers are still counting on a sales pickup this spring, O'Grady noted.

Price resistance may be one factor behind the sluggish sales rates among most carmakers. "I don't care how much (carmakers argue), the average car now costs over $15,600 and people not in the market for four or five years are not used to this," O'Grady said, adding that a typical loan on a car costing that much is in some cases equivalent to buying a $90,000 home under a typical mortgage.

The eight companies, General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp., American Honda Motor Co., Nissan Motor Manufacturing U.S.A., Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Mazda Motor Manufacturing (USA) Corp. and Mitsubishi Motor Sales of America, Inc. reported combined sales of 532,610 cars and 294,888 trucks in the United States during February. This compares with 552,042 cars and 316,092 trucks sold in the year-ago period.

The daily selling rate of 34,479 cars and trucks compares with 36,172 vehicles per day during February 1989. There were 24 selling days both in this year and the year-ago month.

So far this year, the firms have sold 1.08 million cars, off 0.5 percent from the first two months of 1989. Light truck sales so far in 1990 totaled 647,130, up 2.4 percent from year-ago levels.

Sales of GM's domestically made cars during February declined 6.5 percent, while its truck sales rose 0.8 percent from a year before. Second-ranked Ford posted a 9.4 percent decline in car sales, while its truck sales slipped 6.1 percent.

Chrysler's car sales declined 11.4 percent, while its light truck sales including minivans and Jeeps fell 19.9 percent when compared with the combined total a year ago.

Among the smaller companies reporting sales of U.S.-built cars, Honda posted an 18.6 percent gain from year-ago levels. Toyota's sales soared 130.7 percent from relatively low production volumes a year ago. Nissan's car sales, however, decreased 15.2 percent, while sales of its U.S.-built compact trucks slipped 6.6 percent from year-ago levels.

Mazda sold 4,333 of its new MX6 coupes produced at its Flat Rock, Mich. assembly plant, up 46 percent from a year ago. Mitsubishi reported sales of 2,327 Eclipse cars built at its joint venture plant with Chrysler in Illinois, vs. 1,240 a year ago.

For the ten-day period of Feb. 21-28, U.S. automakers sold 194,538 cars, down 6.7 percent from the 208,521 cars sold in the year-ago period. U.S. light truck sales totaled 104,239 units, off 10.0 percent from 115,830 a year ago.

There were seven selling days in this year and the year-ago period. The annual selling rate for car sales during the latest period was a weak 6.7 million, compared with a 7.3 million last year.

MONTEVIDEO, URUGUAY (MARCH 5) UPI - Members of opposing political parties introduced anti-dueling bills in the Chamber of Deputies Monday after an abortive attempt by a police officer to fight a duel with a newspaper publisher.

Deputy Luis Palomeque of the ruling National Party said Monday that dueling should be declared illegal because ''it is an anachronistic institution.''

Social Democrats and the chief opposition Colorado Party are supporting the dueling ban.

Police Chief Inspector Saul Claveria, 55, and his would-be opponent, 52-year-old newspaper publisher Federica Fasano, broke off their negotiations on the terms of the duel over the weekend.

Claveria said in a statement published in Montevideo newspapers that his antagonist, Federico Fasano, publisher of La Republica, had ''disqualified himself'' by announcing his acceptance of the duel on the one hand, but, on the other, refusing to take up arms.

The 52-year-old Fasano on Feb. 27 accepted the challenge by Claveria to a duel, but he said he would go to the field unarmed.

Claveria said this stand ''violated the code of honor of duelists'' and thus disqualified his opponent.

Fasano, for his part, claimed an ''ethical victory,'' which, he said, ended a ''circus.''

''He withdrew, not me,'' Fasano said.

Claveria challenged Fasano to a duel, which is legal in Uruguay under a 1920 law, in a dispute over an article that appeared in the newspaper La Republic saying saying two cars used to transport contraband goods were registered in Claveria's name.

A police investigation cleared Claveria of wrongdoing, but Fasano refused to print a retraction, saying the article was correct.

Former President Julio Maria Sanguinetti and retired Gen. Liber Seregni, a former presidential candidate, are among prominent Uruguayans who have fought duels past years.

Though legal, the duels are rare, and must take place under strictly regulated conditions. The duelists almost always have emerged from the contests - usually fought with sabres or single-shot pistols - unscathed or only slightly wounded.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - The dollar moved lower in heavy New York trading Monday as the Federal Reserve Bank intervened by selling dollars for West German marks in an effective bid to halt the U.S. unit's upward surge.

Following intervention in Europe by the West German, Swiss, French, Italian and Belgian central banks, the Fed entered the fray in the New York afternoon, participants reported. The Fed sold dollars at around 1.7050 marks and undermined market support for the U.S. currency, they said.

"They spent their money wisely," said Chemical Bank manager David Puth of the Fed intervention. "They picked a spot that appeared particularly vulnerable and did it at a time when the market wasn't anticipating anything."

Late in the New York session, the dollar was changing hands at 1.6956 German marks, off nearly two pfennigs from 1.7145 Friday. The U.S. unit was fetching 148.91 Japanese yen, also down from 150.15.

The concerted intervention reflected the central banks' determination to halt the dollar's thrust out of its recent range just below 1.70 deutsche marks and 150 yen, participants said. The dollar's rise has been fueled by doubts on the Japanese and West German financial markets and economies.

"I think what this is going to mean is that dealers need some incentive, some positive news on the U.S. dollar, to justify a move up to 1.7250 or 1.73," said a U.S. bank's foreign exchange manager, declining to be named.

Puth said the Fed's defense of the deutsche mark - previously this year the Fed had only been seen protecting the Japanese yen - was significant in itself as reflecting a "mindset shift" on the dollar.

"There has been a change in sentiment on the dollar," he said. "People think we have a trend reversal." Puth said he expected to see the dollar score gains on German reunification jitters - but added that the mark nonetheless has "fundamental strength" which will develop with time.

Meanwhile, the yen is weakening as capital flows away from shaky Tokyo markets into investments denominated in other currencies, Puth said. Even an interest rate hike by the Bank of Japan may not remedy the situation, he said, as the market has taken such an increase into account.

In New York the British pound slipped to $1.6490 from $1.6635. Other dollar rates: 1.5075 Swiss francs, off from 1.5090; 5.7910 French francs, down from 5.8045; and 1,264.25 Italian lire, off from 1,267.50.

In European trading, the dollar mostly weakened. In Frankfurt it closed at 1.7030 German marks, off from 1.71 Friday, but it strengthened in Zurich to close at 1.5005 Swiss francs, up from 1.4985 last week.

The dollar was lower in Paris, Brussels and Milan, where it finished the day at 5.7410 French francs against 5.8012, 35.31 Belgian francs compared with 35.66 and 1,253.30 Italian lire against 1,266.

In London the pound moved down against the dollar despite intervention by the Bank of England, to $1.6390 from $1.6530. Pressure on sterling stemmed from the current disarray of the ruling Conservative government.

In Tokyo trading the dollar continued to move up against the yen despite Bank of Japan intervention, closing at 149.95, up from 149.75.

Republic National Bank in New York closed cash gold at $404.25 an ounce, up from $403.50 Friday. The New York Commodity Exchange settled gold at $404.10 an ounce, ahead from $403. In Zurich gold closed lower at $404 an ounce compared with $405 Friday. London gold eased to $403.25 an ounce from $403.50.

Republic closed cash silver at $5.125 an ounce, down from $5.135. Comex spot silver eased to $5.116 an ounce from $5.126. Zurich silver was unchanged at $5.15 an ounce. London silver also held stable at $5.13 an ounce.

MEXICO CITY (MARCH 5) UPI - Cuban leader Fidel Castro reaffirmed his country's commitment to socialism and warned that an attack by the United States can never be ruled out, the official Cuban news agency reported Monday.

Prensa Latina, in a dispatch monitored in Mexico City, reported Castro's speech to members of the University Student Confederation in Havana.

Castro referred to what he called ''the encouragement of imperialism,'' saying ''any eventual aggression can be avoided if the United States sees a strong, united people ready for anything.''

''But an invasion by the United States would not create an impossible situation, because they would have to recognize their mistake,'' Castro was reported as saying.

''The Cuban president remarked that ... anyone who attempts to divide is a (traitor), a dangerous enemy to the nation, since the end of socialism in Cuba would be the end of Cuba as a nation,'' Prensa Latina reported.

Last June, the Cuban government executed four top Interior Ministry and military officials accused of involvement in drug trafficking. Sixteen other officials were jailed and 15 more forced to resign or demoted in connection with the scandal.

Some observers saw the executions as a way for Castro to tighten his grip on power in the Caribbean nation of some 10 million people.

Recently, the Cuban Communist Party underwent a major reshuffling after a series of dismissals, demotions and other changes.

''We are far from thinking that we are perfect and we will always be the first to analyze problems and mistakes and to fight to correct them,'' Castro was quoted as saying.

Castro, who has been in power since 1959 when his revolutionary forces overthrew dictator Fulgencio Batista, has vowed adherence to the principles of Marxist-Leninist revolution despite moves toward democracy and capitalist economies in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

''Today we are not only defending Cuba, but also its history. The revolution must be defended even when it is a minority,'' Castro was qhoted as saying.

''Nobody gave or imposed the revolution on the Cubans, we carried it out and we will defend it ourselves, and our ideas are those of the vast majority of the people,'' Castro said.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - The Senate opened debate Monday on compromise clean air legislation amid charges by state and local officials the bill would leave millions of Americans choking on smog and toxic emissions well into the next century.

As Senate leaders formally introduced a bipartisan compromise worked out with the Bush administration, the state and local officials vowed to lobby for ''absolutely critical'' amendments to toughen the legislation, particularly on automobile emissions and pollution from medium-sized factories.

At a news conference with dissident senators, officials from 12 states said Senate leaders compromised too much in satisfying administration concerns about how much the legislation would cost industry.

The compromise, which addresses urban smog, acid rain and cancer-causing chemical emissions from industry, was announced last week after 22 days of private negotiations.

The talks were triggered by a veto threat from President Bush, who said the initial bill drawn up by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee would cost twice as much as his plan for little additional benefit.

While Bush promised clean air for every American by 2000 when he introduced his proposal last year, the state officials said the compromise has so many loopholes that smog is likely to persist well into the next century in dozens of the 101 cities now violating federal health standards.

And, they argued, without firm federal policies to ensure uniform pollution control requirements nationwide, states that insist on tough emission limits would wind up economic losers as industries move to states with weaker laws.

''The proposed 'compromise' is a bad deal for the American people,'' said James Lent, executive officer of the South Coast Air Quality Management Board, which sets air pollution policy for the Los Angeles area.

''It compromises public health. It compromises fairness and equity between the states. It even compromises the future of our children,'' he said.

Other officials calling for strengthening amendments were New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, New Jersey Gov. James Florio and officials under California Gov. George Deukmejian.

Despite such heavyweight support, dissident senators acknowledged they faced an uphill battle to toughen the bill.

At the same time, Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said senators who supported the compromise in the private discussions with the administration might change positions when confronted with ''uncomfortable decisions'' - recorded votes on pro-environment amendments.

''I am not optimistic (about strengthening amendments), but I am hopeful '' Lautenberg said. ''If one has to belly up to the bar in the broad daylight of the Senate chamber, there may be a vote change.''

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine, a prime architect of the compromise, maintained it has solid support, which he called ''the strongest bill that can pass the Senate.''

Mitchell said he was not happy with many of the compromises, such as weakening car exhaust standards and exempting many medium-sized factories from anti-smog controls.

But Mitchell said those changes were necessary to gain the votes needed to assure Senate passage and he pledged to abide by his agreement with the White House to fight any changes to the key provisions of the compromise.

Clean air legislation is stuck in committee in the House, largely due to regional disputes over acid rain controls.

(MARCH 5) UPI - The process of picking a jury for John Poindexter's Iran-Contra trial is moving quickly in Washington. The trial is expected to feature videotaped testimony from former President Reagan.

The Supreme Court ruled today that it's okay to tell juries NOT to use sympathy when deciding whether to sentence criminals to death. The 5-4 ruling overturns an appeals court decision which said a criminal's rights were violated when a jury was told NOT to let their emotions get in the way of their decision.

LIMA, PERU (MARCH 5) UPI - Leading presidential candidate Mario Vargas

Llosa traveled unannounced Monday to Ayacucho to pay his respects to a congressional candidate from his party who was shot to death by leftist guerrillas Saturday.

The surprise trip by the novelist, who is the candidate of the center-right alliance The Democratic Front, came amid escalating violence just one month before Peru's general elections.

Three guerrillas believed to be members of the notorious Shining Path killed deputy candidate Julian Huamani Yauir, 34, Saturday with a shot to the head, police said. He was The Democratic Front candidate in the city of Ayacucho, 205 miles southeast of Lima.

Another Shining Path group killed two policemen Sunday who were guarding a bridge on the outskirts of Huancayo, 130 miles east of the capital.

The officers were identified as David Meza Galvez and Pablo Soto Ventura, both 28. They were surprised by 10 guerrillas who attacked with automatic weapons, police said.

Authorities also reported that six electrical transmission towers were downed near the city of Huancavelica, 150 miles southeast of Lima.

The Shining Path, with some 5,000 members, is the most active of the guerrilla groups in Peru. Since it first surfaced in 1980, authorities say more than 18,000 people have been killed in political violence.

The group, which espouses a traditional communist ideology based on the teachings of Chinese Communist Party founder Mao Tse-tung, has been trying to disrupt the April 8 election by assassinating or threatening candidates.

Polls released Monday showed Vargas Llosa with 44 percent to 47 percent of the vote, and the coalition with a majority in the Senate.

Vargas Llosa's nearest rival, according to the Monday polls, was the candidate of the governing Aprista Party with 13 percent.

WASHINGTON (MARCH 5) UPI - Four major fast-food companies are defying an agreement with eight states to provide consumers with nutritional information at all outlets, a health advocacy group said Monday.

Center for Science in the Public Interest claimed McDonald's, Burger King, Kentucky Fried Chicken and Wendy's are failing to honor a July 1986 agreement made with the attorneys general of California, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, New Mexico, New York, Texas and Virginia.

The agreement required the fast-food companies to make available pamphlets containing nutrition and ingredient information at all outlets and to post signs alerting consumers to the availability of the pamphlets, the non-profit consumer group said.

''We have urged the attorneys general to consider prosecuting the companies unless they resume full compliance within 60 days,'' said Michael Jacobson, executive director of Center for Science in the Public Interest.

The center conducted a survey of about 20 outlets per company in up to nine states and found nutritional pamphlets available at only 25 percent of Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants, 42 percent of Burger King restaurants, 45 percent of McDonald's restaurants and none of the Wendy's restaurants.

''Most of the time when you ask a cashier for nutritional information, they don't know what you are talking about or how to get that information '' said Richard Layman-Heitman, a spokesman for the consumer group.

The best firm in terms of nutritional information was Jack in the Box, a Southwestern region chain that had pamphlets on hand in 83 percent of outlets surveyed.

Dick Detwiler, a spokesman for Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. in Louisville, Ky., said Monday that his firm has provided nutritional information through all of its restaurants ''since the mid-'80s.

''As far as we are concerned, we have complied with any agreement we have made with the attorneys general,'' Detwiler said, adding: ''We get very few requests for this kind of information.''

Denny Lynch, a spokeswoman for Wendy's International Inc., of Dublin, Ohio said his firm has distributed nutritional brochures to store managers in the past and has advisories on menu boards about such information. Outlets may have ''dropped the ball'' by failing to request new supplies of pamphlets, Lynch said, but a memo is being sent out to remind them to reorder.

''We believe consumers have a right to know what's in the food they eat,'' he said.

Cori Zywotow, a spokeswoman for Burger King Corp., of Miami, said the consumer group's objection is the first complaint her firm has heard about a lack of nutritional pamphlets at Burger King outlets.

Such information is required to be on hand at both company-owned and franchise stores in states affected by the agreement, and all company-owned stores nationwide, Zywotow said. Burger King sent out a reminder to managers in February about the nutritional guides, she said.

Terri Capatosto, a spokeswoman for McDonald's Corp., of Oak Park, Ill., said her firm has no record of any agreements on availability of nutritional information.

''There are no agreements. There never have been,'' said Capatosto, adding that, in any case, McDonald's regularily ships out nutritional brochures to its outlets.

But Layman-Heitman said July 8, 1986 statements from both the California and Texas attorneys general said McDonald's agreed to provide nutritional pamplets and signs at all restaurants.

Layman-Heitman said he thinks companies agreed to the 1986 pact not out of concern for consumer health, but as a way of derailing legislation that would have required full nutrition and ingredient labeling on all fast-foods.

''A Big Mac that you eat in Washington is not different from one you eat in Montana, so standardized labeling on the package should not be difficult,'' he said.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 5) UPI - One day after the sudden death of teammate Hank Gathers, the Loyola Marymount Lions Monday postponed any decision about continuing their season but appeared leaning toward accepting a berth in the NCAA tournament.

Gathers, the 11th-leading scorer in NCAA history, collapsed Sunday during the semifinals of the West Coast Conference tournament and died at a hospital without regaining consciousness. He was 23.

The rest of the WCC tournament, which grants an automatic NCAA tournament bid to the winner, was canceled about four hours after Gathers was pronounced dead at 6:55 p.m. at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital.

Conference officials announced they would offer the bid to Loyola, the league's runaway regular-season champion. The NCAA tournament begins Mar. 15.

The Lions and Coach Paul Westhead met Monday morning before an emotional half-hour news conference on campus. Westhead said the session was marked by a ''great deal of quietness.''

''The fact that we haven't made a decision is because we haven't raised the question,'' Westhead said. ''If the question was, would the team play today or tomorrow or in three days ... we wouldn't play. Our concern right now is with Hank and his family.''

Loyola guard Jeff Fryer, who spoke at the news conference with teammate Bo Kimble, seemed in no condition to make a decision about his team's immediate future.

''I don't care if we don't play another game this year,'' said Fryer, who wore dark sunglasses and a black turtleneck while struggling for words.

''We just lost a great part of our family. Before the game in the locker room, Hank said he was feeling strong as ever. We just don't understand how a man that strong could leave us so quickly.''

Kimble and guard Tony Walker, though, indicated they wanted the season to continue.

''Hank and I were like brothers, so close. We overcame so many different obstacles,'' Kimble said. ''I just know Hank would want us to be strong and go on.''

Added Walker: ''I want to play. We've got to do what we can for Hank. If that means going all the way to the NCAA championship, that is our quest.''

Los Angeles County Coroner's officials reported an autopsy was performed Monday, but deferred announcing the cause of death pending toxicological and tissue tests.

Spokesman Bob Dambacher said result of those tests ''won't be ready for at least a week.''

Flags on the Loyola campus were flown at half-staff Monday, and classes went on as scheduled. A sign on the door of the gym at Gersten Pavilion said, ''Hank We Love You.''

A memorial service was set for noon Tuesday at the Jesuit university's Sacred Heart Chapel. At Dobbins Tech in Philadelphia, where Gathers and Kimble went to high school, a moment of silence was held.

Meanwhile, CBS postponed airing a ''Schoolbreak Special'' in which a basketball star collapses during a game to spare the feelings of Gathers' friends and family.

Funeral arrangements were pending.

Westhead said Gathers was a man on whom the team could depend.

''Hank The Bank; I often called him Bankman,'' Westhead said. ''He was our guy as a player and a person. He was the leader of our team, the fiber of what we are. Whatever we were, we were Hank's team.

''We called him the Bankman because we went to him for everything - rebounds, points, for life.''

Moments after dunking on a spectacular alley-oop play that gave the Lions a 25-13 lead over Portland, the strapping 6-foot-7 Gathers crumbled in the halfcourt circle with 13:34 to play in the first half.

Gathers, who once described himself as ''the strongest man in America,'' attempted to rise but could not. The crowd of about 4,000 at Gersten Pavilion, cheering wildly after the dunk, suddenly sat in stunned silence as the star forward went into seizure.

Gathers had fainted during a Dec. 9 game against UC Santa Barbara. An irregular heartbeat was determined to be the cause, and Gathers was placed on anti-arrhythmic medication.

Gathers returned after missing two games but appeared lethargic for several weeks, which he blamed on the medication. He then talked doctors into reducing his dosage.

Asked if Gathers should have been allowed to play following the fainting spell, Loyola Athletic Director Brian Quinn said: ''Complete medical clearance was granted for him to compete.''

Kimble said: ''He was taking his medication.''

Dr. Vernon Hatori, a cardiologist at Centinela Hospital who was treating Gathers since his fainting spell, made himself unavailable for comment Monday. The hospital released a statement, saying Gathers ''has been monitored on a regular basis since the December incident.''

An imposing physical specimen, the 210-pound Gathers was one of the nation's finest players. Working under the Lions' run-and-gun offense, he averaged 29 points and 10.8 rebounds a game this year.

Gathers, who transferred with Kimble from Southern Cal after the 1985-86 season, was expected to be a high draft choice in the NBA. He also had aspirations of becoming a sportscaster.

Last season, he became only the second player in NCAA history to lead the nation in scoring (32.7) and rebounding (13.7). He had 28 points Saturday against Gonzaga, and his dunk Sunday gave him 2,222 points for his college career.

DETROIT (MARCH 6) UPI - General Motors Corp. said Monday it will merge the company's engine operations into a single unit in an effort to contain costs and respond more quickly to market demands.

However, a spokesman for the giant carmaker could not say when the GM Engine division would become fully operational or if any of the 35,000 workers among the company's Chevrolet-Pontiac-Canada and Buick-Oldsmobile-Cadillac groups would be eliminated.

''The study team recommendations have not been put together with the goal of idling factories or causing the layoff of people,'' GM spokesman Charles Licari said. ''On the other hand, we know there are efficiencies to be gained by integrating'' the two major vehicle groups' powertrain operations.

Licari said the new unit's goals are to lower overall costs and ''marshal company resources'' to meet any future environmental pressures from the government.

The new division also plans to expand its operations by bringing in contract work to design and manufacture future engine products, he said.

Industry analysts believe GM, like other top U.S. carmakers, are woefully behind Asian automakers in developing new engines like a multi-valve V6 motor.

Ford Motor Co. recently announced plans to build by 1994 a new V6, which industry sources say is a 24-valve aluminum design now offered by carmakers like Toyota and Nissan.

''I imagine this will allow GM to offer essentially the same engines across its different vehicle lines,'' said industry analyst Michael Luckey who heads an auto consulting group in Tappan, N.J. ''It makes sense to merge as many components as possible, but the heart of this effort is to consolidate some jobs and trim costs.''

Luckey said that exterior and interior styling will continue to differentiate GM cars from one another, while basic powertrains and underbodies will become even more common.

''GM engines have been pretty much the same for many years, whether it is a Chevy or a Buick,'' he said. ''I don't think buyers will care much as long as it is a good engine.''

GM, which currently has 10 engine plants and seven engineering centers among its U.S. operations, said formation of the engine division is another step in the evolution of a 1984 corporate reorganization that merged five engine groups into two.

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - An undercover drug investigator was shot to death Monday and two other officers were wounded in a botched cocaine deal in a city housing project that ended in a gunbattle that also left one suspect injured, officials said.

The three officers - two city detectives and a state trooper assigned to the New York Joint Drug Enforcement Task Force - were trying to buy 4.4 pounds of cocaine in a hallway of the high-rise project on Manhattan's Lower East Side when the suspects tried to rob them, police spokeswoman Sgt. Janet Greco said.

The two city officers were shot in the legs, and the state trooper, Joseph Aversa, 31, was shot in the left eye, police said. Aversa, a six-year veteran of the force, later died in surgery, state police spokesman Ron Clark said.

One suspect, identified as David Hernandez, suffered a gunshot wound to the abdomen, and a second suspect, identified as Oswaldo Santana, was in police custody, Greco said.

Housing Authority police said a third suspect was at large, and police on foot and in helicopters searched the area around the project, but the existence of this suspect could not be confirmed.

Mayor David Dinkins rushed to the hospital to visit the wounded officers and police from throughout the city converged on the hospital to donate blood.

Aversa, of Sparrowbush, N.Y., joined the state police in March 1984 and was married with no children. He had worked on the drug task force since October.

(MARCH 5) UPI - Most American children are used to watching hundreds if NOT thousands of commercials on television each year. Many will now get the chance at school.

Tennessee media mogul Chris Whittle calls it ''an important day for all schools.'' Whittle heads a company that produces a daily 12-minute program called Channel One, which began beaming into 400 U-S schools today.

The first program included news from the Soviet Union and East Germany... along with commercials for M-and-M candy, Cheetos chips and Gillette razors.

While Whittle describes his product as a visionary educational tool... critics say the show is a commercial exploitation of students.

Channel One has signed agreements with 29-hundred schools with an audience of one-point-seven Million teenagers in 34 states.

Whittle Communications gives each school T-V equipment worth as much as 50-thousand dollars in exchange for the school showing the program. The firm is hoping to turn a profit through advertising.

Unofficial returns from the Soviet Union show candidates from nationalist and democratic movements sweeping yesterday's elections and advancing to run-offs while orthodox communists were soundly rejected.

The official news agency Tass says one of the few candidates to win an outright majority was maverick politician Boris Yeltsin... who took 80 percent of the vote against 11 rivals in his Moscow district for a seat in the parliament of the republic of Russia.

Lithuania's pro-independence movement overwhelmingly clinched control of the Baltic republic's parliament... which lays the groundwork for a confrontation with Moscow over secession.

Official results from most of yesterday's elections won't be made public until March 14th, but opposition groups and independent media say their results show the democratic-minded candidates winning.

The opposition movement in the Ukrainian capital of Kiev and independent monitors in Leningrad show the orthodox Communists were defeated in Russia's second and third largest cities.

(MARCH 5) UPI - An Iranian newspaper known to reflect the views of hardline Iranian clerics is suggesting that civil rights activist Jesse Jackson and former Attorney General Ramsey Clark visit Tehran as unofficial envoys. It did NOT say if they would have success in negotiating the release of hostages.

The state-owned Islamic Republic News Agency says the newspaper was NOT speaking for the state when it suggested Iranian officials probably would have respect for the two men. The paper says Jackson and Clark... who have successfully negotiated the release of hostages before... have an empathy for Muslim and third-world people.

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater says rumors of an imminent hostage release are just rumors and the U-S government has NO information about any imminent release.

Contacted in New York... Clark said he has been working on the hostage situation for years but has had NO recent contact with Iran. He said he had NOT heard of the article... but if the article held any promise for negotiating the release of hostages... he would be happy to help.

The Nicaraguan Contras say they will lay down their arms only after President-elect Violeta Chamorro takes office next month. They're calling on her to ''demilitarize'' Nicaragua.

Speaking from Honduras, a Contra rebel says the army has begun taking steps toward de-mobilization. But the Contras are refusing international pleas to disband immediately. They say they will NOT turn their arms over to foreign countries or international groups such as the United Nations or the Organization of American States.

Following Chamorro's victory over President Daniel Ortega, Chamorro called for the Contras to disarm immediately and Ortega declared a cease-fire with the rebels.

Chamorro's UNO party resumed talks with the Sandinista government today over the transfer of power to UNO.

(MARCH 5) UPI - A cornerstone of President Bush's education policy has a chip in it. A magazine survey found American parents are involved in their children's education only to the extent of what they can do at home.

92 percent of the parents questioned said they spoke to their kids about school at least once a week and 73 percent said they help their children with homework weekly.

But the picture changes dramatically when it comes to stepping outside the home. A majority of parents said work commitments and a lack of time keeps them from getting involved in activities at their children's school.

When parents are active, the survey found it more likely involves fund-raising or extra-curricular activities, rather than academic matters.

Parental involvement is becoming increasingly important with the Bush administration pushing the right of parents to choose their children's school.

The president of the National P-T-A says the choice is NOT an equal one. And- in the words of Ann Lynch- ''a lot parents in this country are NOT equipped with a knowledge of schools.''

ANALYSIS BY JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (MARCH 5) UPI - Drought drives herds of elephants, zebras, hippos, buffalo, nomadic lions and more on a dusty trek across northern Botswana to the banks of the Linyanti River where a fascinating ecological drama unfolds.

That is the story narrated by Peter Strauss in ''Journey To The Forgotten River,'' a National Geographic Special to air on PBS Wednesday, Mar. 7 at 8 p.m. Eastern time (check local listings).

There is a moral here for people, too, but it doesn't become clear until the end of the hour-long documentary.

The Linyanti really is only a half-forgotten river - it lives in the memories and instincts of some of the animals of Botswana, to draw them in time of need.

''On our crowded planet, few Edens remain...'' the narration begins. Botswana in southern Africa is one such place for its vast animal population until the early 1980s, when drought strikes.

Vegetation is replaced by dust and the Savuti Channel, a waterway on which the animals in the area depend for water, shrinks, dries up and disappears. The herds of animals, and their opportunistic followers such as the nomad lions, move on. Their only chance is to make the journey to the forgotten river.

''Africa is an anient place. Its inhabitants have ancient memories,'' the narration explains.

The 70-80 miles to the Linyanti is marked faintly by old elephant trails - only the elephants have lived long enough to remember the last drought 25 years before, when again salvation lay on the banks and flood plains of the Linyanti.

One of the last to leave is a pregnant hippopotamus, who stays so long she is almost entombed in the drying mud of the Savuti.

Slowly she trudges through the dust. About three-quarters of the way she finds a rain pan, a pool of rainwater, where she stops and gives birth.

But a herd of elephants, also fleeing drought, wallow and drink and roil the water as they pass through and they crack the pan's clay bottom, allowing the water to escape. The hippo heads for the Linyanti again, her little calf stumbling along behind.

The nomad lions circle a pair of hippos on the way to the Linyanti. Ordinarily, hippos would seeks safety in the water at the scent of lions. There is no water, but they are saved by the lions' caution. Hippos have very big teeth.

Later an old cow elephant dislocates her shoulder. The herd reluctantly pushes on and the lions pounce.

The scene shifts to the Linyanti, a watery world about to be invaded. The lion prides guard their turf and when the newcomers begin arriving they even hunt buffalo in the bright full moon, the eyes of predators and prey reflecting silvery light.

When the mother hippo and her calf arrive, the hippos of the river challenge her and she fights one after the other for acceptance, which she eventually wins for herself and her baby. Hippos must be instictively social animals, because there is little other advantage to belonging to the group.

The crocodiles feast on mouthful after mouthful when flocks of tiny birds fly to the river and hover at the bank waiting their turn to drink.

The elephants are the agents of change. They pull down trees to get at the succulent upper leaves, breaking open the canopy of the riverine forest.

The area becomes denuded, which disturbs the crocs. Mother crocs bury their eggs along the river bank. They put their throats to the ground to hear the heartbeats as the babies hatch, and are there to dig out their young and carry them in their mouths to the river.

Now they must change their habits and begin burying the eggs on the papyrus islands of the river. The elephants, having knocked down so many trees and eaten so much of the foliage, now also must turn to the papyrus islands for food.

They rip up branches and twigs which are carried downstream where they clog the narrows, drying up some areas and diverting water into new paths and lagoons.

Are the elephants just like man, then, using up and destroying their own environment and that of the animals who share it?

Not exactly. What happens - and has happened before - is that the rains come. In 1988 and 1989 the region receives more rain than in the previous 30 years.

The drought is over and the animals - elephants included - once again spread out over the land, leaving the riverine forest to grow again, the river vegetation to reappear, the ecology to right itself and the Linyanti to become again a forgotten river until the next time it is needed.

SALEM, Ore. (MARCH 6) UPI - A lawyer for Farmers Group Inc. asked Oregon's insurance commissioner Monday to block one of the world's most-watched business deals - a hostile European takeover of Farmers and its British parent conglomerate.

Steve Blackhurst told insurance commissioner Ted Kulongoski that the takeover would bring no benefits to Farmers' policyholders and would include ''substantial risks.''

But lawyers for the European companies said the deal would not hurt Farmers' operations and should be approved.

The comments came during opening arguments in a hearing on a complex proposed takeover of B.A.T. Industries, a huge London-based conglomerate that owns Farmers and also includes tobacco, retailing and paper operations.

Because Farmers, which is based in Los Angeles, operates in Oregon, Kulongoski is one of nine state insurance commissioners who must approve or reject the proposal.

The deal would work this way: Hoylake Investments - a holding company led by well-known Anglo-French financier Sir James Goldsmith - would buy B.A.T. and then sell Farmers to Axa Midi, a French insurance company, for $4.5 billion. Hoylake would run B.A.T.'s tobacco operations.

Hoylake's original offer to buy B.A.T. was for $21.9 million, but that proposal has since lapsed due to British deadlines, and it is not clear how much a new offer would be worth. Details of the offer would be worked out later if American approval is received for the Farmers transfer.

B.A.T. and Farmers strongly oppose the takeover attempt.

The intricate case brought a fleet of lawyers and public relations experts to the state Capitol, where the hearing was held. Kulongoski - who faced a 20-foot-long table of lawyers - said he expected the hearing to take at least a week.

Although no state has ruled on the proposed takeover, hearings have been completed in Illinois, California and Idaho. Other states that will have to approve the deal are Washington, Texas, Ohio, Kansas and Arizona.

Blackhurst, the Farmers lawyer, said Axa Midi will have to borrow $4.5 billion to buy Farmers from Hoylake. He said that if the French company suffers financial setbacks later, it could be hard-pressed to repay the debt.

''Axa intends to repay this long-term debt by sucking money out of Farmers '' Blackhurst said.

He also said Kulongoski cannot review Hoylake's proposal to sell Farmers to Axa Midi, because Hoylake will not own Farmers until it formally buys B.A.T.

''You're being asked to review what is essentially a hypothetical situation,'' Blackhurst told Kulongoski.

But Mark Wood, a lawyer for Hoylake and Axa Midi, said the deal would not hurt Farmers' policy-holders.

''The Axa Midi group is one of the world's leading insurance groups,'' he said. ''They don't have in mind any change in the American management of Farmers.''

Whatever happens in the takeover attempt, B.A.T. seems destined to shrink.

In an attempt to streamline its operations and fight off the Goldsmith takeover, B.A.T. is trying to sell off its paper and retailing subsidiaries, which include Saks Fifth Avenue and Marshal Fields department stores.

Goldsmith has said that if he is successful, he will sell all of B.A.T.'s American holdings except its tobacco company.

PHOENIX (MARCH 6) UPI - The board of directors of Pinnacle West Capital Corp. Monday rejected a revised $1.7 billion offer by PacifiCorp of Portland, Ore., to acquire Pinnacle West, Arizona's largest corporation.

Chairman Richard Snell said the decision came at a special meeting after the board reviewed studies by First Boston Corp. and Salomon Bros. Inc. and concluded that the reviewed proposal was ''inadequate from a financial point of view.''

PacifiCorp officials expressed disapointnment at the company's rejection of their second, revised offer but said they still would like to acquire Pinnacle West's utility subsidiary, Arizona Public Service Co. An initial proposal from PacifiCorp was rejected on Dec. 14.

''PacifiCorp's revised proposal, which is subject to a number of conditions and adjustments, was valued by our financial advisers at less than Pinnacle West's current book value of approximately $16,'' Snell said.

He said the latest proposal called for Pinnacle West shareholders to receive .88 of a share of PacifiCorp stock for each share of Pinnacle West stock. Monday's closing price of PacifiCorp stock was $22.13 while Pinnacle closed at $11.75. Pinnacle West has 86.7 million shares of common stock outstanding.

According to Snell, the offer price was to be adjusted if, among other things, the common stock equity of Arizona Public Service Co. was more or less than $2 billion at closing or if liabilities of Pinnacle West's non-APS subsidiaries exceeded the net realizable value of those subsidiaries' assets by more or less than $350 million.

The offer also was contingent upon an APS electric rate increase of at least 2 percent by early 1991 and inclusion in its rate base of Unit 4 at the Cholla power plant and Unit 3 at the Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station. APS rates are regulated by the Arizona Corporation Commission.

''The board unanimously determined that PacifiCorp's proposal is inadequate and not in the best interest of Pinnacle West and its shareholders,'' Snell said. ''When viewed closely, the combination of adjustment factors and conditions substantially reduces the real value of the PacifiCorp proposal to our shareholders and would interfere with our ability to operate the company in their best interest.''

Snell added, ''Our board strongly believes the best course for Pinnacle West is to continue as an independent company and allow our shareholders to benefit directly from any improvement in the company.''

Pinnacle West lost approximately $551 million in 1989, primarily in its thrift subsidiary, MeraBank, which was seized by federal regulators on Jan. 31, and Malapai Resources Co., its uranium mining subsidiary which has discontinued operations.

Pinnacle West's only profitable subsidiary is Arizona Public Service Co., Arizona's largest electric utility. Its other subsidiaries are SunCor Development Co. and El Dorado Investment Co., which recorded combined losses of $28 million last year.

''We're disappointed that our offer was rejected without any further discussions between us,'' said Al Gleason, PacifiCorp's chief executive officer.

Gleason said the earlier, rejected offer was increased ''to reflect Pinnacle's resolution of its MeraBank obligations, refinancing of its debt and additional analysis of the benefits of merging PacifiCorp Electric Operations with Arizona Public Service.''

''The new offer reaffirmed our commitment to limit price increases for customers of Arizona Public Service to 2 percent per year over the next four years,'' Gleason said.

''We believe that the regulatory conditions containing in the offer were reasonable and achievable and would result in a significantly lesser burden on APS customers than the rate increases currently sought by APS,'' he said. ''We continue to remain interested in acquiring APS through a merger or otherwise.''

Day One of former national security adviser John Poindexter's trial ended with 21 potential jurors deemed qualifed to serve on a jury in the Iran-Contra case.

Poindexter is the highest ranking Reagan administration official to face charges in the scandal that involved secret arms sales to Iran, with the profits funneled to Nicaraguan rebels. At the time, Congress had banned aid to the rebels.

Poindexter today watched from a swivel chair as potential jurors were questioned by federal judge Harold Greene, prosecutors and defense lawyers.

By the end of the day, 27 potential jurors were questioned and 21 of them were deemed qualified for service. Jury selection resumes tomorrow.

Poindexter is accused of five criminal counts, including obstruction of congressional investigations and making false statements to Congress. His trial is expected to include President Reagan's videotaped testimony.

Another victim in the fight against illegal drugs. A botched cocaine deal in a New York City housing project ended in a gunbattle that left an undercover drug officer dead and two officers injured.

employees is ''urgently'' requesting a meeting with the company to resume contract negotiations with the bus company.

Greyhound officials say they've tried to reach Union President James La Sala at the telephone number on the telegram... but have been unsuccessful so far.

La Sala is also urging the company to release safety records and drug and alcohol test results for a replacement driver whose bus killed a picket Saturday in Redding, California.

Prosecutors are studying possible criminal charges against the driver. But Greyhound officials say the death was accidental.

Clashes between pickets and replacement drivers continue in the violent strike. In southwestern Missouri near Marshfield... a striking worker followed a non-striking worker driving a bus onto an interstate. The driver parked the bus on the roadside and got out and fought with the striking employee.

A federal judge freed three men accused of flag burning... in the second straight defeat for a new law that prohibits desecretion of the American flag.

A U-S District Court spokesman in Washington, D-C, says federal judge June Green dismissed charges against Dread Scott, Dave Blalock and Shawn Eichman. Each was charged with violating the Flag Protection Act of 1989.

A lawyer for the group argued the law is unconstutional and they have a right to violate it.

The decision comes two weeks after a federal judge in Seattle dismissed charges against four people accused of burning U-S flags, just moments after the law took effect last October.

That dismissal case is being appealed to the U-S Supreme Court, which ruled in a Texas case that flag burning is a form of protest upheld by the Constitution.

Some conservatives on Capitol Hill say the Seattle case just underscores the need for a constitutional amendment outlawing desecretion of the American flag. That's a move President Bush has said he supports.

A European Community official says East and West Germany will meet Friday. On March 14th... the four World War Two victors... Britain France, The United States and the Soviet Union... will join in the negotiations.

Today's revelation comes amid international anxiety about West German Chancellor Kohl's refusal to renounce German claims on former German territories annexed to Poland after World War Two.

German opposition leaders say Kohl is appeasing right-wingers in his party and conservatives who were expelled from the lands annexed to Poland. (MARCH 5) UPI - A key witness in the death last August of a black teen-ager in New York's Bensonhurst section surrendered to the F-B-I in Dayton, Ohio, tonight. Officials say 21-year-old John Vento... missing since December... will be extradited to New York. He is to testify in state Supreme Court in Brooklyn about the death of Yusuf Hawkins, a black teen killed by whites after he ventured into Bensonhurst. Earlier today, because of Vento's absence, the judge hearing the Hawkins case was forced to delay the trial of six whites charged in the murder.

Jury selection moved quickly today in the Iran-Contra trial of former national security adviser John Poindexter. By the end of today's proceedings in a federal courtroom in Washington, D-C, 21 potential jurors had been deemed qualified for service. Poindexter faces five criminal charges stemming from the scandal that marred former President Reagan's second term. Jury selection resumes tomorrow.

Unofficial returns from yesterday's Soviet elections show pro-democracy candidates beating orthodox Communists in at least the nation's second- and third-largest cities. Popular fronts and local media in Leningrad and Kiev show nationalist and reform-minded candidates far ahead of the regulars. The official results will NOT be announced until March 14th. Plenty of run-off elections are expected.

The official Cuban news agency reports Cuban leader Fidel Castro remains committed to socialism. The report, monitored in Mexico City, quotes Castro's speech to a University Student Confederation in Havana... during which he said an attack by the United States cannot be ruled out. Castro, who has been in power since 1959, vowed to adhere to Marxist-Leninist principles... despite recent reforms in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

(MARCH 5) UPI - The bi-partisan Congressional Budget Office says the Bush administration's fiscal 1991 budget projection is off by about 70-BILLION dollars. It says the budget proposal underestimates by about 44-BILLION dollars the cost of the Resolution Trust Corporation to bail out Savings and Loans. Adding that to less optimistic economic figures, the agency projects a fiscal 1991 budget deficit of 131-BILLION dollars... 70-BILLION higher than Bush predicts.

The federal government says Campbell Soup is voluntarily recalling 24-thousand packs of microwave soup because some of it was NOT properly heated-treated and may cause illness. However, the firm disputes the soup's potential for causing sickness. The recall applies to Microwave Chunky Beef Soup distributed to stores in Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Wisconsin. It was produced at Campbell's Maxton, North Carolina, facility. NO illnesses have been reported.

CAMPBELL, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Macamerica (NASDAQ:MRAC), the Macintosh division of Microamerica, has signed an exclusive agreement with Photonics Corp. to distribute the AppleTalk/LocalTalk version of Photolink to computer dealers and value-added resellers throughout the United States.

Photolink is a new product which uses infrared light, instead of cabling, to transmit data between Macintosh computers and peripherals in an AppleTalk/LocalTalk networking environment. User installable and relocatable in minutes, Photolink operates at the full speed of the interface, with a proprietary error correction scheme for reliable data transmission.

''We are genuinely pleased to have established this relationship. The quality and functionality of Photonics' technology will be a tremendous aid to our resellers' connectivity solutions,'' said Martin Fishman, Macamerica's vice president and general manager.

''The Photolink represents something very rare in this industry: an entirely new source of revenue for the dealer,'' said Stephen Walsh, Photonics' vice president of sales. ''Generally, resellers setting up new networks or adding to existing workgroups don't make a dime on the cabling. Photolink represents an opportunity for dealers to capture this lost revenue.''

Each AppleTalk/LocalTalk Photolink unit has four ports to accommodate Apple Macintosh computers and peripherals. Users can also daisy-chain Macintoshes to a single Photolink port, thereby allowing more than four computer/peripherals to connect to a single Photolink. The suggested retail price of Photolink is $1,195. Macamerica currently has Photolinks in inventory for immediate distribution to resellers.

Founded in 1985, Photonics' mission is to develop and market cable-free connectivity solutions. The company was the first to develop and market a commercially viable wireless alternative to cable for computer networks. Investors include Alpha Partners, Apple Computer Inc., Cornerstone Ventures, Crosspoint Venture Partners and Venrock Associates.

Macamerica is the Macintosh division of Microamerica, an international, value-added distributor of premium microcomputer products and services. Founded in 1979, Microamerica has 35 worldwide offices, with subsidiaries in Canada, Latin America and Europe. In the United States, Microamerica offers a wide variety of training, service and support programs through Macamerica, its independent reseller division, and its major reseller division.

REDWOOD CITY, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - John W. Fara, Ph.D., age 47, has been named president and chief executive officer of Biospan Corp.

Biospan is a privately held biotechnology company focused on the discovery and development of novel therapeutic products to interrupt biological processes responsible for the occurrence of autoimmune diseases.

''Dr. Fara's wealth of experience in both the business and science side of product development will prove invaluable to the company's progress,'' noted Fred Dotzler, managing general partner of Medicus Venture Partners. ''We are extremely pleased that he has assumed the leadership of Biospan.''

Dotzler, age 44, is a member of the company's board of director and served as president prior to Fara's arrival.

Fara was most recently president of Prototek Inc., a Dublin, Calif., biotechnology company. He previously served for 10 years at ALZA Corp., headquartered in Palo Alto, Calif., where he was vice president of business development and formerly director of biomedical research.

Before entering the business world, Fara was a physiology professor at The Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions and the State University of New York. He received his Ph.D. in physiology from the University of California, Los Angeles.

Biospan was founded in May of 1988 to explore protein-based products for use against major autoimmune diseases -- including rheumatoid arthritis, multiple sclerosis, myasthenia gravis, systemic lupus erythematosus and insulin-dependent Type I diabetes.

Current therapies for these diseases are often ineffective and have serious potential side effects. Biospan is concentrating on the structure and function of the major histocompatibility complex, which is intimately involved in the induction of the human immune response and which has been implicated in the development of autoimmune diseases.

The company's goal is to pursue two avenues of development: 1. therapeutics that will be specific for each autoimmune disease without affecting other components of the immune system; 2. screening services that will enable other companies to determine the potential activity of existing compounds in the treatment of autoimmune diseases.

Biospan is headquartered in Redwood City. Venture capital funding has been provided by Alpha Partners, Crosspoint Venture Partners and Medicus Venture Partners.

ZURICH, SWITZERLAND (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Applied Materials Inc. said Tuesday that it is continuing expansion of its existing European operations and outlined plans for further growth during 1990.

Johan van Leeuwen, director of Applied's European Sales and Service organization, said the company's European revenues during the 1989 fiscal year increased by 56 percent to $75 million, out of total worldwide corporate sales of almost $502 million. During that same fiscal year, which ended Oct. 29, 1989, Applied's European workforce increased to more than 500 people, including the Applied Implant Technology manufacturing facility in Horsham, England, which makes advanced-generation ion implant systems for the world market, and the European sales and service organization.

Growth during the past year included the expansion of Applied's European headquarters in Amsterdam, the Netherlands, as well as expansion of the sales/service operations in Munich and Stuttgart, West Germany, Livingston Scotland, and Grenoble, France.

At a media briefing during the SEMICON/Europa trade show, which opened in Zurich today, van Leeuwen forecast that Applied's 1990 sales in Europe will grow to approximately $100 million, an increase of about 30 percent over 1989 -- making it the largest supplier of wafer fabrication equipment in the European market.

''This is a very exciting time for the European semiconductor industry,'' van Leeuwen said. ''We are seeing Europe's own semiconductor companies planning for greatly expanded and upgraded production that will come on stream in the 1990-1992 timeframe, with the emphasis on 1- and 4-Megabit DRAM production. At the same time, several U.S. and Japanese semiconductor companies who are currently in Europe, or who have not previously manufactured in Europe, are announcing expansion or construction of wafer fab facilities to be completed prior to the unification of the European market at the end of 1992.''

To prepare for this continued growth, van Leeuwen said Applied's plans for 1990 include:

-- Expansion of the company's operations in Italy to provide service and support for both SGS/Thompson, and the Texas Instruments advanced wafer fab facility under construction in Avezzano.

-- The addition of Japanese-speaking sales and service representatives to work with Japanese companies that have announced wafer fab facilities in Europe, such as Fujitsu, Hitachi and Mitsubishi.

''The European community is determined to play a leadership role in high technology products, and achieving that goal will create a massive market for advanced semiconductors,'' van Leeuwen noted. ''Capital equipment investment in the European semiconductor market should increase from an expected $1.2 billion this year to about $2.2 billion in 1992. The inclusion of IBM in the JESSI consortium also is significant, potentially opening the door for global companies like Applied to participate in this important venture.''

Van Leeuwen said Applied has done well in Europe with all four of its areas of production equipment; dry plasma etching, chemical vapor deposition (CVD), epitaxial deposition and ion implantation.

The company is showing its latest offerings in all four product lines at SEMICON/Europa. They include the following:

-- The Precision 5000 CVD system, the world leader in advanced Chemical Vapor Deposition (CVD) dielectric applications;

-- The Precision 5000 Etch system, which shares with the 5000 CVD the unique multi-chamber architecture which has helped Applied gain worldwide leadership in both etch and CVD;

-- The Precision 7700 Epi system, which is the latest and most highly automated application of Applied's industry leadership in epitaxial technology.

-- The Precision Implant 9200, including the unique new Automated Variable Implant Angle option which allows users to change the angle of the wafer being processed without disruption of production. This new feature also is being demonstrated here for the first time in Europe.

Applied Materials Inc., based in Santa Clara, Calif., is the leading independent supplier of wafer fabrication systems to the worldwide semiconductor industry. It is a global growth company with market leadership in chemical vapor deposition (CVD), dry plasma etching and silicon deposition, and is rapidly increasing market share ion implantation, its fourth product technology.

SANTA CLARA, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Applied Materials Inc. announced Tuesday that it has received a $5 million order from Texas Instruments Inc. for equipment to be installed in TI's new wafer fabrication facility in Avezzano, Italy.

The order is for Precision 5000 CVD (chemical vapor deposition) and Precision 5000 Etch systems, said Johan van Leeuwen, director of Applied Material's European sales and service organization. The equipment will be installed on the Avezzano fab's 4-megabyte production line. The systems are scheduled for delivery beginning in April and May of this year.

The Avezzano plant is modeled after the Texas Instruments' facility in Miho, Japan which uses the same Applied systems, van Leeuwen said. The fab is located in Southern Itlay, about 80 km east of Rome.

The Precision 5000-series CVD and Etch systems use a single-wafer, multi-chamber architecture that enables them to perform single or sequential processing steps within specialized chambers, without removing the wafer from a protected vacuum environment. There are currently over 350 Precision 5000 systems installed in advanced wafer fabrication facilities worldwide.

CHANDLER, AZ. (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - ShareData Inc. Tuesday announced a loss for the second quarter and six months ended Dec. 31, 1989, and restructuring of its management team with new focus on the cartridge-based game computer market.

The company reported a net loss of $519,284, or 12 cents per share, on net revenues of $1,143,608 for the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1989 compared with net income of $634,680, or 13 cents per share on net revenues of $3,303,560 for the year earlier period. The net loss for the six months was $285,299, or 6 cents per share compared with net income of $1,126,744, or 24 cents per share, in fiscal 1989. Net revenues declined from $5,612,313 to $4,220,914 for the six month period.

The company attributes the decline in net revenues to a general downturn of the disk-based recreational software market, the loss of the popular ''Wheel of Fortune'' and ''Jeopardy!'' software titles and sharply higher marketing and administrative costs associated with the continued introduction of its Business Systems Division network software product, ''INTO.''

The company has moved aggressively to introduce new products and reduce its operating costs. As part of its cost containment measures, the company has already closed its California office, laid off approximately 25 percent of its support and administrative personnel in the Business Systems Division and consolidated its Consumer Products Division operations into the corporate office located in Chandler.

Judith H. Lange, vice president of the Consumer Products Division resigned from the company as part of this realignment process and the board has decided not to renew the contract of Thomas W. Larkin, vice president of the Business Systems Division.

ShareData has also acquired the rights to a technology to produce cartridge-based games for play on the Nintendo Entertainment System. The company plans to introduce its first game cartridge in March 1990.

''It was a very difficult decision to shift our emphasis to game cartridges,'' said Michael S. Williams, president. ''However, we believe that time is of the essence in this business. Nintendo has sold more than 20 million machines and we want to access that base. We believe this restructuring and refocus of the Consumer Products Division and our current arrangements with Brother Industries for the Business Systems Division will enable the company to return to profitability, hopefully by the fourth quarter.''

The company is not a licensee of Nintendo. The company's cartridge based games are not designed, manufactured, sponsored or endorsed by Nintendo. Nintendo and Nintendo Entertainment System are trademarks of Nintendo of America Inc.

OAKLAND, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - The Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum Complex Tuesday reported record results for the 1988-1989 fiscal year, with gross revenues of $11 million and net revenues of $2.4 million.

The highest gross and net revenues in the Coliseum's history, these figures compare with $9.4 million in gross revenues and $2 million in net revenues in fiscal 1987-1988.

''Certainly the success of the Oakland Athletics, the Golden State Warriors and Bill Graham Presents contributed to the Coliseum's record-setting year,'' said George Vukasin, president of the Coliseum

Board of Directors, the non-profit board of 10 volunteers that manages the facility.

''But succes is also reflected in the number and variety of events that were scheduled last year -- and the number of people of all ages who went through the turnstyles.''

Vukasin said 4.4 million people attended 286 Coliseum events last year, bringing the total to 68.7 million people who have visited the complex since 1966. In that time, the Coliseum has held 6,658 events.

Last year's events included the World Series, NBA playoffs and a pre-season NFL game between the Raiders and Houston Oilers. There was also the Virginia Slims Tennis Tournament, Ringling Brothers/Barnum & Bailey Circus, Olympic and World Figure Skating Tour, Disney on Ice, Grand National Roadster Show and the Ice Capades.

The Harlem Globetrotters entertained at the Coliseum, as did the World Wrestling Foundation. A Sesame Street musical production was staged, as were several concerts and religious events. The annual state high school basketball championships and regional high school football playoffs were played at the Coliseum, and many shows and exhibits were held there, for anything from recreational vehicles to model trains, dogs to skis to home decorating.

Vukasin said the board has continued to invest in major capital improvements, including the Kingsford Picnic Plaza, which was built last year for the enjoyment of at least 6,000 A's fans who had pre-game picnics at the site.

The Coliseum Crowd Pleasers Program was initiated last year, which encourages Coliseum employees to help make each event an enjoyable family experience.

The ''Clean Team Program'' also was established, which added conveniences such as diaper changing tables in rest rooms, to provide for a cleanup facility during events.

Other capital improvements completed in 1989 were the construction of eight additional stadium sky boxes; resodding of the stadium field; rebuilding of the arena sound system; and extensive painting of previously unpainted areas in both the arena and stadium.

Gross revenues are based on rental of the stadium, arena and exhibition hall, food service and parking concessions, services provided to tenants and other income. The Coliseum's fiscal year is Nov. 1 to Oct. 31. Revenues were announced today as the Coliseum Board Finance Committee concluded the report it will present to the Coliseum board later this month.

SAN JOSE, CA. (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - NexGen Microsystems Tuesday confirmed that Compaq Computer Corp. of Houston, Texas, has made an equity investment in NexGen.

The technology investment, according to a Compaq statement, is based on Compaq's belief that, ''NexGen is working on some interesting technologies which could be important in the future.''

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - At the first annual meeting of stockholders Tuesday, Donald A. Lazar, president of Dandees Enterprises Inc. (NASDAQ:DANY/Boston:DND) announced the first sales of the company's new biodegradable disposable diapers to a number of West Coast grocery and supermarket outlets.

He also reported a number of other accomplishments for this Los Angeles-based corporation during its first quarter.

''Initial trade response to our new product has been excellent,'' Lazar said. ''We are continuing our introductory sales meetings with brokers around the country and they are just receiving samples of biodegradable Dandees for presentation to the grocery trade.

''Additionally, response to our first ad for Dandees in the March issue of Parenting magazine brought phone calls from mothers around the nation--Louisiana, Florida, Ohio, New York, Maryland, Illinois and California--asking where they could buy the product. Our ad in the May issue of American Baby should pull as strongly. We feel the product is a winner.''

Lazar reported oral agreements to purchase Dandees in the two family economy packs, medium and large, from a number of large firms.

''The broker in Southern California has gotten off to an early start because of his proximity to corporate headquarters,'' Lazar said. ''In the first week of sales presentations he has gotten commitments from the following accounts, representing approximately 28 percent of the market in Southern California: Certified Grocers, Hughes Markets, Boys Markets and Ralphs Grocery Co. These accounts have approximately 750 stores in Southern California.''

Lazar also said, ''In Oregon, where the broker received samples late last week, we have oral agreements from United Grocers and Fleming Food. They supply approximatelty 40 percent of the all-commodity volume, or ACV, in Washington state and Oregon. The U.S. Navy Commissary also has indicated its intent to purchase Dandees for the eight commissaries serviced by its Oakland facility.''

Lazar told attending stockholders about other accomplishments, including the redesign of the Dandees logo and the repackaging of the product. Attending stockholders were given packages of the new Dandees to take home.

He also introduced two executives who had come on board since the end of the last fiscal year: Michael J. Miottel, director of sales and marketing and James S. Robertson, director of operations. Lazar reported that Miottel's efforts had resulted in the company now being represented by 56 food brokers covering most of the continental United States plus Hawaii and Canada.

At the meeting, stockholders elected management's slate of directors to the board and voted for the non-statutory stock option plan.

Dandees Enterprises has headquarters in Los Angeles. There are 1.2

million shares outstanding, with a float of 500,000. The stock began trading Oct. 18, 1989, at the offering price of $6. For the month ended Feb. 28, 1990, the price ranged from a high bid of $8 to a low bid of $6.50. It is currently trading at approximately $7.

The company develops, markets and distributes biodegradable disposable diapers in a variety of six pastel colors within the package. The company is considering the development of other baby products such as color-coordinated T-shirts, disposable bibs, leg warmers, baby oil and baby powder.

ENGLEWOOD, CO. (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - On March 1, Basic Earth Science Systems Inc. sold all of its interest in four non-operated properties in the Bear Creek and West Bryceland Fields in Bienville Parish, La., to an unrelated party for $567,000.

With gross oil and gas sales revenue from these four properties of $23,000 or 1.5 percent of Basic's total oil and gas sales revenue for the year ended March 31, 1989, management does not believe that Basic will be adversely affected by the sale of these properties.

Instead, with respect to the sale of these properties, Basic and its bank entered into an agreement whereby $356,000 of the sales proceeds was used to pay down the line of credit to $855,000, and the remaining $211,000 of the sales proceeds will be retained by Basic to be used as working capital.

MOUNTAIN VIEW, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Sun Microsystems Tuesday announced that 627 F3 format fonts are available to Sun workstation users.

Sun's font technology, called OpenFonts, was introduced just one year ago and licensed to major type houses such as Linotype, Monotype, Bigelow & Holmes and others. OpenFonts now has a selection of high-quality, compatible fonts exceeding that of the industry's leading font suppliers, making good on Sun's promise to rapidly expand its supply of fonts.

At the heart of OpenFonts is F3, an open, intelligent outline font description. These fonts are automatically created with Sun's TypeMaker software, then generated as bitmaps for any raster device -- from computer screens to typesetters -- at any resolution by TypeScaler software.

OpenFonts includes such inexpensive, easy-to-use tools that more F3 fonts have been created in a year than major font suppliers have been able to produce in several years of using PostScript tools.

Autologic Inc., of Thousand Oaks, Calif., also announced its plans to produce 200 faces from its font library in Sun's F3 font format. The Autologic library is comprised of 1,500 typefaces, including special-purpose fonts like Hebrew and Arabic scripts. URW Unternehmensberatung of Hamburg, Germany, an official partner of International Typeface Corp., is scheduled to produce 140 ITC-trademarked faces using the F3 format by the end of 1990. The company will also offer F3 fonts for the rapidly developing Eastern European market.

F3 format fonts can be used in any F3-compatible environment, such as OpenWindows and versions of AT&T's new UNIX System V Release 4 that contain OpenWindows. Since OpenFonts is fully licensable, F3 fonts are also available in products that incorporate Sun's TypeScaler software, such as Frame Technology's FrameMaker 2.0 or ScriptWorks from Harlequin Ltd.

BOSTON (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Siclone Sales & Engineering Corp. Tuesday introduced and began shipping a 50 MHz CPU accelerator board for the Macintosh II and IIx, the Si3050 Accelerator, and announced significant price reductions on its Si3033 33 MHz CPU accelerators, here at the opening of the Seybold Professional Publishing Conference.

Siclone also announced a major reduction in price for its Si3033 CPU accelerators. The suggested retail price for the basic Si3033 was reduced from $3,999 to $2,495; the same unit with a 33 MHz Motorola 6888 floating point co-processor was reduced from $4,995 to 2,995. The new prices are effective immediately.

The Si3050 delivers speed improvements of up to 40% over the Si3033, which offers twice to three times the speed of an off-the-shelf Mac II or IIx.

An optional 50 MHz Motorola 68882 floating point co-processor is also available for the Si3050. The Si3050 is now shipping to customers who have back-ordered the product, with a suggested retail price of $4,995 for the basic Si3050, and $5,995 for the Si3050 equipped with a 50MHz 68882 math co-processor. Shipments to new customers will begin by the end of the month.

The Mac-based electronic prepress market has been waiting patiently for a 50 MHz accelerator that would provide significant, cost-effective performance over a 33 MHz accelerator, along with total compatibility with color prepress components and the reliability of a well-engineered product according to Jim Nakasuji, President of Siclone.

The Si3050 offers all of the proprietary features of the Si3033, including a 64k cache, use of the 68030's burst mode capabilities, optional 16 MHz operation, and customizable U882 Express. Both the Si3050 and Si3033 Accelerators are compatible with the Macintosh Operating System 6.0.4, and A/UX Version 1.1.1. Siclone also announced an upgrade path for current owners of the Si3033. Owners of the Si3033 should contact Siclone directly for details.

The Si3033 has been shipping for over a year and is considered the accelerator of choice among Macintosh-based electronic prepress system integrators, including Hyphen Systems, Crosfield Lightspeed, Advanced Laser Graphics, and American Color.

#90065b0232 03/06/1990 ~Business Wire

MILPITAS, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Siclone Sales & Engineering Corp. Tuesday began shipping its RAM-TO-GO memory expansion boards that expand the available memory of the Macintosh Portable from the standard 1 megabyte to a total of 3, 4 or 5 megabytes.

RAM-TO-GO solves what many Portable users have found as a major shortcoming of the Portable: inadequate memory to use Apple's MultiFinder along with large applications and data files. RAM-TO-GO boards provide maximum memory capabilities with low power consumption by integrating 100 percent (CMOS) components, a new RAM technology called Psuedo-static RAMs, and state-of-the-art double-sided surface-mount technology.

Psuedo-static RAMs offer high density performance with power consumption only slightly higher than static RAMs. Siclone takes surface mount technology one step further by mounting components on both sides of the circuit board. The result is a small card that fits neatly into the Portable's RAM slot while upgrading to a maximum of 5 megabytes of memory.

MultiFinder is a proven productivity tool, but to be used effectively it requires more than one megabyte of memory. With RAM-TO-GO, productivity is increased by having all standard applications loaded at wake-up. RAM-TO-GO also takes full advantage of the Macintosh Portable's built in Ram Cache and Ram Disk features, which are designed to provide maximum performance.

Siclone develops and markets performance enhancement products for the Apple Macintosh line of personal computers, including Si3050 and Si3033 CPU accelerators for the Macintosh II and IIx. Siclone products are distributed in the United States and South America by Ingram Micro D, and through additional international distributors worldwide.

The song ''My Happiness'' will also be part of a collection of Elvis recordings that will be available on album, cassette and CD when it's released by BMG, formerly RCA Records.

Shelby S. Singleton Jr., chairman, president and chief executive officer of Sun, also announced that a contract has been prepared between Sun and ACI Communications Inc., a Las Vegas company that specializes in 900 number marketing. On March 13, the ''Million Dollar Quartet,'' a legendary impromptu jam session between Elvis Presley, Carl Perkins and Jerry Lee Lewis that made musical history in 1956, will be released. The complete recordings will be available for the first time, on BMG and the quality is far superior to any of the previously released versions.

NEWPORT BEACH, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Newport Pharmaceuticals International Inc. (NASDAQ:NWPH) Tuesday announced results for the fourth quarter and the year ended Dec. 31, 1989.

The company reported revenue of $11,263,000 for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, an increase of 42.7 percent over revenues of $7,892,000 in the fourth quarter of 1988. The 12-month revenues increased to $39,022,000, up 25.5 percent over year 1988 revenues of $31,094,000.

The company reported net losses of $939,000 for the fourth quarter of 1989 and $1,450,000 for the full year, which were 56.2 percent and 70.7 percent respectively, less than the losses incurred in the fourth quarter and 12 months of 1988.

The company's increased revenue reflects the continued growth of its wholly owned subsidiary, America's Pharmacy Inc. (API), a mail service prescription drug company, whose revenue increased by $3,245,000 (52.9 percent) for the fourth quarter and by $7,492,000 (33.4 percent) for the 12 months ended Dec. 31, 1989, compared with the like periods of 1988.

The sharp increase in API's revenue for the fourth quarter was due in part to the acquisition in September 1989 of Delivered Pharmacy Services (DPS) from a subsidiary of Lincoln National Life Insurance Co.

The company's revenue from other sources, including Isoprinosine, increased by $125,000 (7.1 percent) for the fourth quarter and by $436,000 (5.0 percent) for the 12 months ended Dec. 31, 1989, as compared with the like periods of 1988.

In 1989, Isoprinosine sales declined to $4,588,000 from $6,511,000 in 1988 reflecting reduced demand by the company's major licensees due to changes in licensee promotional efforts and changes in government reimbursement policies in Italy.

The company's reduction in operating losses reflects primarily an overall reduction in research and development expenditures from the prior year. During the course of the year, the company reduced its long-term debt by $4,800,000 through the repurchase of a portion of the company's outstanding 10 percent senior secured convertible notes.

Through these repurchases, the company incurred an extraordinary loss of $164,000 in the fourth quarter and an extraordinary gain of $80,000 for the full year.

LOS ANGELES (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Telecredit Inc. (NASDAQ:TCRD) announced Tuesday that net earnings for the three months ended Jan. 31, 1990 rose 18 percent to a record $8,987,000, or 81 cents per share, from $7,595,000, or 69 cents per share, for the third quarter of fiscal 1989.

Fiscal 1989's third quarter results included a net loss of 4 cents per share for Telecredit's Light Signatures subsidiary. Revenues increased slightly to $47,529,000 in the third quarter from $46,845,000 in the comparable period of the prior year. The absence of Light Signatures revenue and the reduction of Telecredit's credit union cardholder revenue following the expiration of the company's card processing contract with Payment Systems for Credit Unions Inc. on Sept. 30, 1989 impacted the growth in revenue in fiscal 1990.

As previously reported, Telecredit successfully retained approximately 55 percet of its credit union customers following expiration of its contract with PSCU. Accordingly, the three months ended Jan. 31, 1990 was the first full quarter of operations reflecting the departure of approximately 45 percent of Telecredit's credit union customers in early October 1989.

For the first nine months of fiscal 1990, net earnings grew to $21,925,000 or $1.98 per share, versus $18,929,000, or $1.72 per share, for the first nine months of fiscal 1989. Revenues for the first nine months rose to $129,213,000 from $121,212,000 for the same period in the prior fiscal year.

Operating revenues and pre-tax earnings from card processing services in the third quarter of fiscal 1990 declined 10 percent and 30 percent, respectively, from the comparable quarter in fiscal 1989 due to the reduction in cardholder revenue from credit unions.

As of Jan. 31, 1990, Telecredit was providing turnkey card processing services to 1,648 banks, credit unions and savings institutions. During the third quarter of fiscal 1990, 88 new institutions were added to Telecredit's customer base, including 76 new customers who are members of the Independent Bankers Association of America.

SAN ANTONIO, TX (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Datapoint Corp. (NYSE) Tuesday announced that customer delivery of its 20Mbps (megabits per second) ARCNETplus Development Kits will begin March 19.

''Tests with prototype ARCNETplus kits demonstrate as great as six times the throughput of 2.5 megabit per second ARCNET technology,'' stated Robert E. Hollingsworth, Datapoint director of engineering. With the kits, developers can establish prototype ARCNETplus networks and design optimizing components without waiting for the availability of production ARCNETplus chips, expected later this year. Each development kit includes: -- two 20Mbps ARCNETplus network interfaces (each interface comprises two full-size boards); -- technical documentation; -- connectivity components; -- a NETBIOS-compatible DATALAN PC network operating system; and -- software designed to facilitate the developers' work. Interest in the kits has been expressed by developers of products such as -- network hardware -- for example, LAN adapter, capture, and analyzer boards and hubs; -- software drivers for both proprietary and NETBIOS-compatible network operating systems; -- software components to run capture and protocol analyzer boards, bridges, routers, and LAN management tools; as well as -- organizations interested in assessing the new technology, such as computer manufacturers, military and factory-floor application developers, system integrators, and academic and research institutions.

''ARCNET has more than two million LAN connections installed worldwide,'' stated J.F. Raffestin, Datapoint director in charge of marketing the ARCNETplus technology.

''It was originally designed as an interprocessor bus. Now, with its added capabilities, we expect manufacturers and systems integrators to use ARCNETplus for interconnections in client/server architectures and for high speed and graphics peripherals,'' Raffestin commented.

ARCNETplus is the second generation of Datapoint's ARCNET local area network and is interoperable with existing ARCNET nodes -- making it a multiple-bit-rate LAN.

ARCNETplus adds the benefits of eight-times faster operation, streamlined packet overhead, variability in packet sizes to optimize both transaction-processing applications and rapid bulk-data transfers, and support for as many as 2,047 nodes per network segment.

DALLAS (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Comstock Resources Inc. (the ''company'') announced Tuesday that it has completed the second phase of a real estate property exchange with certain holders of six percent notes payable of the company, which when combined with an earlier reported transaction, results in the retirement of over $1,466,000 in debt obligations that were payable in full on Dec. 31, 1990.

The second phase of the exchange was completed in March 1990, and accordingly the company will report a retirement of approximately $965,000 in debt obligations with a resulting gain on the sale of approximately $369,000 as part of the first quarter 1990 financial results.

The company completed the first phase of the exchange in September 1989, and accordingly previously reported the retirement of approximately $501,000 in debt obligations as well as a gain on the sale of approximately $227,000.

M. Jay Allison, president and chief executive officer said that the combined property exchanges are extremely beneficial to the company because the transactions not only eliminate a significant obligation from current cash flow requirements, but also result in combined gains on the sales of approximately $596,000.

Allison stated, ''These property exchanges are part of the company's ongoing business plan to sell all of the Nevada assets (except the company's patented and unpatented gold and silver claims).

''The company still owns approximately 1,000 acres of undeveloped land, 100 town lots and three multi-tenant rental properties, most of which it intends to sell for cash in 1990 to unrelated third parties, resulting in additional gains on the sale of real estate,'' declared Allison.

Comstock Resources Inc. owns and manages cash producing assets in oil, casinghead and natural gas, precious metals and real estate, with subsidiary operations since 1865. The oil and gas portfolio represents the company's primary income stream and currently includes ownership interests in more than 90,000 acres and nearly 400 properties in four states.

PARIS (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Air France Tuesday announced that it will spend $65 million during 1990 to enhance its services for business travelers.

Many of the enhancements planned will directly affect more than 60 flights a week between France and the United States.

Leading the list of enhancements is a wider and more comfortable seat, called ''Espace 2000,'' which will be installed is the carrier's ''Le Club'' business class cabin. It features more room to recline, incorporates special head and foot rests, and has an adjustable lower-back seat cushion for maximum support.

The new business class seat will be offered on routes linking France with major U.S. cities, including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Miami, Chicago, Houston, Los Angeles and San Francisco. It will also be available on medium-haul routes between France and more than 100 destinations in Europe.

''There is a new spirit of competition at Air France to meet the challenges and opportunities of a quickly-changing global economy,'' said Bernard Attali, chairman of Air France. ''The improvements in our Le Club service, coupled with our tradition of providing the highest quality cuisine and service, will enable Air France to compete more effectively.''

Between now and year-end, ''Espace 2000'' will be installed in the airline's fleet of approximately 60 aircraft which are utilized on transatlantic and intra-European routes. On 747s, the new seat is arranged seven abreast, reduced from the present eight-abreast configuration, in a 2-3-2 layout separated by twin aisles.

On the twin-aisle Airbus, the configuration is six abreast in a 2-2-2 arrangement. There will be more space per passenger, with a seat width of more than two feet between armrests.

In addition to ''Espace 2000,'' Air France will also introduce a new meal service complemented by new table settings, menu covers and graphics. To be introduced March 25, the menu features a third choice of main course, a ''Chef's suggestion'' drawn from the regional cuisines of countries served by Air France. On the flights from the Unite States, the specialties will include such dishes as Shrimp Jambalaya, Chicken Maryland and Medallions of Venison and Wild Cranberries.

Major changes will also be made at Air France facilities on the ground. At JFK airport in New York, a program costing over $4 million, already underway, will result in improved check-in facilities and lounges for Concorde, first class and business class clients.

To suit the business traveler's schedules, more flights are also being added on major U.S.-France routes, including new nonstop service to Paris from Washington and more nonstops from Chicago and Houston. Together with new routes added last year from JFK to four French cities -- Lille, Lyon, Mulhouse and Strasbourg -- Air France will have a total of more than 60 departures per week from the United States to France and Europe.

BOCA RATON, FL (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Siemens Information Systems Inc. Tuesday announced the introduction of an interface that allows Unisys 1100 and 2200 series mainframe computers on-line access to the Siemens high-performance, non-impact printers.

The software, developed by Georgia State University Foundation, will permit access to the Siemens 2200-2, 2300-2 Laser Printing Systems and the 2050 LED Printing Systems.

The SPIN-X software package offers the Unisys user an option to move from line printing to quality laser printing. It is being featured by Siemens Peripheral Systems Division at the Direct Marketing Association's (DMA) 25th Spring Management Conference and Exhibition in San Antonio, March 6-9.

Available immediately, SPIN-X is competitively priced at approximately $12,000 depending upon system configuration. SPIN-X is a batch program that requires no local modification to the operating systems and no hardware except for a pair of adaptor cables which are included in the package.

SPIN-X allows a site to sysgen and operate a Siemens printer on a block multiplexor channel as though it were a standard Unisys printer. This access to Siemens printers provides the Unisys user with such features as varying fonts, forms overlays and line densities, acknowledged advantages of page printing technology. Faster speeds, letter quality printing, graphics applications and improved job turn-around time are also realized.

"We are committed to expanding our proven printing technologies to a wider variety of end-users, and that means offering the non-IBM host computer user the advantages previously limited to IBM mainframe users," said Michael Kurz, director of marketing for the Peripheral Systems Divison.

"Within the past month we introduced the SPUR interface that allows our printers to connect to IBM System/3X and AS/400 and other non-IBM computers. Hard on the heels of that we're following through with SPIN-X.

"By developing an interface for Unisys users, we are further expanding the parameters of our technology to another segment of end users who have traditionally utilized line printers," Kurz stated.

The Siemens 2200-2 and 2300-2 laser printers offer consistent print quality operating at 103 and 206 pages per minute (ppm) respectively. The 2050 is a cut sheet printer which operates at 50 ppm and features advanced LED imaging and duplex printing. All the Siemens printers offer 240 x 240 resolution.

A cold fusing process is available for the 2200 which facilitates special applications requiring embossed forms, heat sensitive glues, plastic IDs or recycled paper. Additionally, the laser printers provide features such as perf-to-perf printing and continuous forms, with total size flexibility using blank or preprinted stock.

SUNNYVALE, CA (BUSINESS WIRE)--Charles R. Munnerlyn, Ph.D., chairman and CEO of VISX Inc. (NASDAQ:VISX) (Boston Stock Exchange:VSX) Tuesday announced a major ruling in favor of VISX by the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) in the on-going patent interference between VISX and Taunton

Technology, which could eventually extend to other third parties.

The principal claim in the VISX patent application claiming corneal reshaping was interpreted broadly by the examiner-in-chief, who also held that VISX had adequate disclosure supporting that principal claim.

Taunton requested reconsideration of that ruling and it was then reviewed by a panel of three examinders-in-chief. This panel upheld the initial decision in VISX's favor.

Munnerlyn announced that this ruling represented a major advance in the establishment of VISX's patent rights to fundamental claims in the area of corneal reshaping with excimer lasers.

''While there has been a lot said about the number of motions decided in favor of each side,'' stated Munnerlyn, ''it is the outcome concerning one or two primary claims, such as this one, which will dictate who will prevail in the interference.''

VISX continues to maintain it has the legitimate claim, as the inventor of photorefractive keratectomy (PRK), to certain patent applications.

PRK has the potential to eliminate the need for eyeglasses or contact lenses with a 30 second procedure. This technology has the potential to open a multi-billion dollar U.S. market.

VISX continues to make significant progress in FDA regulated human clinical studies being conducted at a number of world-class eye research centers.

VISX Inc. designs, manufactures and markets advanced technology systems for ophthalmic applications.

BILLERICA, MA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Pacer Systems Tuesday announced it had returend to profitability in 1989, earning $708,326 (14 cents per share) on revenue of $25 million for the year ended Dec. 31, 1989, chairman and chief executive officer John C. Rennie announced.

This compares to a net loss of $719,242 (14 cents loss per share) on revenue of $26 million in 1988. Net earnings from continuing operations in 1988 amounted to $659,035 (13 cents per share).

Pacer Systems provides computer-based products, sensor and simulation systems and engineering services to military and industrial customers.

Pacerl captured $47.1 million in new contracts in 1989 and ended the year with $82.2 million in contract backlog, its historic high. The company also improved its Dec. 31, 1989, cash position to $2.4 million, up from $319,019.

''Pacer again proved its ability to win in a competitive marketplace by capturing all of its important competitions over the past year,'' said Rennie. These contracts reinforced the company's position in its principal business, antisubmarine warfare (ASW) systems for the U.S. Navy.

Pacer also began to build up business areas that fit well in a world of lessening military tensions, Rennie said. He cited these areas:

-- Unmanned vehicles. New work won by Pacer in 1989 support these pilotless craft, which will reduce pilot requirements and greatly enhance efficiency in carrying out reconnaisance and target testing missions.

-- War gaming. Pacer contract wins last year solidified its position as a key contractor in the development and administration of computerized officer training in projected conflict situations.

As part of its strategy to generate revenue from commercial areas, Pacer moved aggressively this year to capture market share in the emerging commercial flight simulator market.

The company won a contract from WestAir, a California-based airline, to build a new class of FAA pilot trainer known as the Flight Training Device (FTD). FTDs provide sophisticated training to the airlines at siginficantly less cost than training performed in the aircraft or in off-site flight simulators.

Pacer also began to show results in two products that Rennie believes will provide another source of revenue growth in future years.

The company won an initial production contract from the U.S. Navy to install its proprietary BALLASTr, the first computerized shipboard system for damage control and ship stability accepted by the U.S. Navy.

Pacer also won jobs to expand the application of its SPS-1000 digital signal processors, which perform up to 5 billion floating point operations per second. The new processors assist the Navy in testing equipment that simulates the undersea ASW environment.

MANILA, PHILIPPINES (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - San Miguel Corp. (SMC), the Philippines-based beverage, food, and packaging group, Tuesday reported consolidated 1989 sales of 36.7 billion Pesetas (US$ 1.7 billion (a)), an increase of 19.1 percent over 30.8 billion Pesetas in 1988.

Consolidated net income rose 18.5 percent over the previous year level, to 2.43 billion Pesetas ($112 million). Earnings per share rose to 4.30 Pesetas (US $.20) from 3.67 Pesetas in 1988.

Starting this year, San Miguel issues consolidated financial statements.

SMC's consolidated net sales of 36.7 billion Pesetas in 1989 consists of the net sales of both the parent company and subsidiaries more than 50 percent-owned by SMC. Net sales for 1988 have been restated to conform to this presentation.

The subsidiaries consolidated with the parent company include, among others, Coca-Cola Bottlers Phils. Inc. (CCBPI); San Miguel Brewery Ltd. of Hong Kong (SMBHK); La Tondena Distillers Inc. (LTDI); Philippine Dairy Products Corp.; Monterey Farms Corp.; and Packaging Products Corp.

The increase in consolidated net income includes non-recurring items, such as SMC's availment of the Central Bank's debt-to-equity conversion scheme in the payment of its foreign loans, gains on sales of certain investments and income from the sale of a property in Hong Kong. Profits realized through the debt-to-equity conversion scheme are also included in 1988 net income.

Excluding non-recurring items, consolidated net income declined by three percent, reflecting an increase in interest expenses - due to higher interest rates and additional debt obtained to finance the company's expansion - as well as higher working capital requirements.

Consolidated income from operations rose by 7.5 percent to 3.86 billion Pesetas ($177 million) from the 3.59 billion Pesetas registered in 1988. Increasing production costs - including higher raw material and fuel prices, higher wages and the inherent costs of expansion and modernization - limited the growth of the parent company's income from operations to 1.7 percent.

Income from operations of the group's consolidated subsidiaries grew by 12 percent, principally due to improvements in operations at CCBPI, LTDI, and SMBHK.

Founded in 1890, San Miguel is the Philippines' largest industrial enterprise and is active within the brewing and beverages, food and food-related, and packaging areas. San Miguel's shares trade on the Manila and Makati Stock Exchanges. San Miguel prices may be accessed on the Reuters Equity 2000 service under the symbol SMC.

PALO ALTO, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Hewlett-Packard Co. (NYSE: HWP) Monday introduced an advanced scientific calculator that automates many complex problem-solving tasks so that engineers and students can concentrate on applying the calculations to projects.

The new calculator, the HP 48SX, also can plug into and be used with an IBM-compatible or Apple Macintosh personal computer. By doing so, the calculator becomes a math-software program for the PC, and the PC becomes a peripheral for the calculator to use to display and store information.

One of the biggest headaches for engineers and students using calculators today is that they have to convert different units of measurement, such as cubic feet and miles, to a common measurement before they can solve a problem.

The HP 48SX automatically converts measurements for 148 different units in 16 categories such as force, mass and energy. In addition, users can add their own measurement units to those built into the calculator.

The calculator, which has a U.S. list price of $350, also makes it easier to enter equations. With all other scientific calculators on the market, an equation must be converted into a computer language the calculator understands. With the HP 48SX, equations can be entered in the same format as they appear in a textbook.

The calculator also integrates graphics and calculus functions to automatically find variables of a curve -- such as roots, intersections and derivatives -- and to display them as graphs.

An optional reference card containing more than 300 science and engineering equations, including the periodic table of elements, is available for a U.S. list price of $99.95. Where appropriate, an equation can be displayed as a picture.

For example, an equation for a cantilever beam can become a picture of the beam with the equation's variables, such as forces, length and height, pinpointed on the structure.

The HP 48SX can connect to either an IBM-compatible or Macintosh PC, using an optional serial-interface kit, which has a U.S. list price of $99.95. Doing so turns the calculator into a sophisticated math program at as much as half the cost of many PC-based math software programs on the market.

For example, a PC user composing a report can send a command to the calculator to compute the area under a curve. While the calculator is working the numbers, the user can continue writing the report. When the calculator finishes its task, it sends the answer to the computer screen.

The user then can insert the information into the appropriate spot in the report.

Hewlett-Packard Co. is an international manufacturer of measurement and computation products and systems recognized for excellence in quality and support.

The company's products and services are used in industry, business, engineering, science, medicine and education in approximately 100 countries. HP has 94,000 employees and had revenue of $11.9 billion in its 1989 fiscal year.

PALM SPRINGS, CA (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Physicians who refer patients to specialists for tests can now "tune in" on the specialists' dictation, rather than wait for a written report.

Through IBM Voice Management Facility/2(a), a custom solution offering, announced in Palm Springs Tuesday, a specialist can dictate a report to the transcription department and simultaneously make the oral report immediately available to a referring physician.

The solution consists of IBM Personal System/2's(a), connected in a Local Area Network (LAN), which are specially adapted for dictation and transcription, as well as IBM Transcription Assistant(a) software and custom services.

To accommodate physicians' busy schedules, the system can automatically call the referring physician and play back the oral report. Or, it will allow a physician who is authorized to call in for the oral report - either from his or her home, hospital, office, car, or from any touch tone telephone. In addition to test results, it also can provide the physician with status information about the patient or the procedure.

Voice Management Facility/2 can be used in hospital departments with transcription requirements, such as radiology, pathology, cardiology, or physical therapy.

"The point of this unique system is to help satisfy our customers' need to access information immediately, before the transcription process has run its course," said Doug Bergman, manager, IBM Health Industry Marketing. "It will help speed up the medical diagnostic process and help initiate patient treatment sooner."

The Voice Management Facility/2 can also be applicable to administrators and professionals in business and government sectors who need to disseminate vital information for rapid decision-making. The custom solution offering was announced to hospital executives at IBM's Health Executive Conference taking place here from March 5 to 7.

Voice Management Facility/2 has been developed by IBM as a part of the Integrated Diagnostics System (IDS), a joint development project of IBM and GE Medical Systems.

Prices for a Voice Management Facility/2 solution can range from approximately $50,000 to $300,000, depending on the size of the enterprise and options selected. IBM plans limited 1990 installations beginning in May.

CHICAGO (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Rollins Burdick Hunter Co. (RBH Co.), a subsidiary of Aon Corporation, Tuesday announced a new business venture with Choei Co., Ltd., a major Japanese insurance agency and exclusive agent for the Long Term Credit Bank of Japan.

This new venture provides the multinational Japanese clients of Choei and Long Term Credit Bank vital access to RBH Co.'s extensive market network in the United States.

Under the agreement, Choei will refer its Japanese clients to RBH Co. who will design cost- effective risk management programs and conduct insurance company negotiations with underwriters. RBH Co. will analyze existing risk management programs and consolidate various subsidiary operations into single programs for these Japanese clients.

RBH Co. is one of the nation's largest insurance brokerage firms with offices across the country and correspondents on six continents. The Long Term Credit Bank of Japan is ranked the 21st largest banking institution in the world based upon total assets as of December 31, 1988.

John R. Pacholick, Vice Chairman of Rollins Burdick Hunter-International, a subsidiary of RBH Co., commented: ''The new venture makes great advantages available to clients of Choei and Long Term Credit Bank by enabling them to improve their risk management programs and at the same time to lower premium costs associated with their U.S. operations.''

Mr. Pacholick illustrated these principles by noting that RBH Co. had already helped a major west coast hotel, introduced by Choei, to realize a 20 percent saving in its property/casualty premium by realigning its insurance program.

RBH Co. coordinates global insurance programs for multinational corporations through its affiliate, RBH- International, headquartered in Chicago with representatives in Europe and the Far East. RBH Co. is a sub-holding company of the Rollins Burdick Hunter Group.

The RBH Group is a major subsidiary of Aon Corp., an insurance holding company listed on the New York, London and Midwest Stock Exchanges with assets exceeding $9 billion. Aon's subsidiaries have operations throughout the United States and Canada, as well as Europe and the Pacific.

NEW YORK (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Richard Branson, chairman of Virgin Atlantic Airways, announced Tuesday the British carrier will sponsor and create the ''Virgin Forest'' program.

By joining forces with two California-based environmental organizations, TreePeople and the Earth Communications Office (ECO), Branson hopes to draw attention to the desperate plight of the environment.

The British carrier will plant a tree for each Virgin Atlantic passenger who flies from Los Angeles to London in 1990. The ''Virgin Forest Program'' will begin on May 16, 1990, marketing the airline's first flight to Los Angeles.

To kick off the event, Virgin Atlantic will auction off 200 economy seats and 30 upper class seats on its first flight from Los Angeles to London.

All monies raised from the silent auction (bids taken by mail), will be donated to the two organizations.

Richard Branson has been involved with several national and international environmental programs during the past decade. His concerns for the environment are reflected in his innovative programs planned for the airline.

He made Virgin Atlantic a ''green'' airline in May of last year. The duty-free bags are bio-degradable and the toiletries in the washrooms are all-natural.

He banned tobacco advertisements on all of his flights and encouraged all of his other companies to follow suit.

He has recently announced the addition of four completely non-smoking flights on the airline's Newark to London route, (beginning May 18, 1990), making Virgin Atlantic one of the first international airlines to offer ''smoke-free'' flights across the Atlantic.

His latest endeavor, the ''Virgin Forest'' should also put Virgin Atlantic ''on the map'' as an environmentally concerned airline.

TreePeople and ECO are two highly visible organizations on the West Coast, and both are dedicated to solving the international environmental problems.

TreePeople produces results by promoting personal, community and international involvement to improve the environment through the planting of trees.

ECO speaks through the entertainment industry, and works with scientific and environmental leaders to offer information and awareness about the environment on an international level.

CHATTANOOGA, TN. (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Signal Apparel Co. Inc. (NYSE:SIA) Tuesday announced a net loss of $702,000, or 25 cents per share for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, 1989, compared with a net loss of $1,600,000, or 53 cents per share, in the year-earlier period.

For the twelve months ended Dec. 31, 1989, the company recorded a net loss of $578,000, or 27 cents per share, compared with a net loss of $5,209,000 or $1.75 per share, for the twelve months ended Dec. 31, 1988.

Net sales for the quarter and the twelve-month period ended Dec. 31, 1989, were $20,357,000 and $90,603,000, compared with $18,031,000 and $72,137,000 for the respective periods in 1988.

The net loss for the twelve months ended Dec. 31, 1989, includes a gain of $585,000, or 19 cents per share, resulting primarily from a reversion of assets from a terminated pension plan and was reduced by $292,000, or 9 cents per share, representing the cumulative effect of a change in the accounting method related to inventory valuation.

The loss for the year is primarily attributable to unfavorable manufacturing variances, reduced margins on close-out merchandise sales and the write-off of obsolete inventory.

The company also announced that one of its short-term bank credit lines in the amount of $3,600,000, which had not been utilized since April 1989, was not renewed on Feb. 1, 1990. During fiscal 1989, the company utilized on a regular basis less than $3,000,000 of its available lines of credit totaling $7,200,000.

The company currently has available a short-term bank credit line in the amount of $3,000,000. The company is exploring and negotiating supplementary or alternative credit facilities.

REDONDO BEACH, CA (MARCH 7) BUSINESS WIRE - TRW presented its first installment check for $100,000 to Robert C. Detweiller, president of California State University, Dominguez Hills, for the development of the California Academy of Math and Science.

The check, part of a $1 million grant, was presented Tuesday night by Dale Van Natta, TRW's director of civic and community relations, at the Carson City Council meeting.

The California Academy of Math & Science, the first in California and only the fourth in the nation, will be a four-year high school designed to attract minorities and women to scientific and engineering disciplines. Located on the CSU Dominguez Hills campus, it is scheduled to open this fall with its first 100 students.

Since the school was announced on Nov. 29, 1989, literature and applications for enrollment have been distributed to more than 40 schools in the Los Angeles basin. A total of 60 schools are targeted to receive the information.

At the same time the school was announced, TRW was honored as the school's first major donor. Since that time, five other major entities have pledged their support, including the California State University Foundation, the Educational Foundation of America, Digital Equipment Corp. Hughes Aircraft Co. and California's department of Education.

At the council meeting, Van Natta also accepted a city proclamation honoring TRW for its commitment to helping California and the United States remain scientifically and technologically competitive through the turn of the century. In addition to the California Academy of Math & Science, the city noted TRW's support of several other community educational programs involving Carson schools, the university and outreach to minorities and women.

''TRW is very supportive of the university and the people of Carson, and a great example of a good corporate citizen,'' said Carson Mayor Michael Mitoma.

TRW is a diversified international corporation providing high-technology products and services to defense and space, information systems and automotive markets. The company's 1988 sales totaled about $7 billion. The company employs more than 25,000 people in Southern California.

PALO ALTO, CA. (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - The Cooper Companies Inc. (NYSE:COO) Tuesday reported net income applicable to common stock of $1.5 million or 6 cents per share on sales of $10.3 million for the first quarter ended Jan. 31, 1990, compared with a net loss applicable to common stock of $7.1 million or 30 cents per share in the same period a year ago.

This was the company's second successive quarterly profit. Results for the first quarters of 1989 have been restated to reflect Cooper Technicon, which was sold in June 1989 as a discontinued operation.

Results for the first quarters of 1990 and 1989 are not directly comparable primarily due to the dispositions of the company's AQUAFLEX soft contact lens business in the United States and Japan in the first quarter of 1989 and its international contact lens business in May of 1989.

The disposition of the AQUAFLEX business generated a gain of $13 million in the first quarter of 1989.

In addition, during the first quarter of 1990, the comapny generated a $6.2 million or 26 cents per share gain on the purchase of its 10-5/8 percent convertible subordinated reset debentures due 2005.

Arthur C. Bass, president and chief executive officer, in commenting on the results stated, ''WE are pleased with the positive swing of $7.9 million in net income in this period. In addition to the extraordinary gain from the purchase of the debentures, the improvement was attributable to the sale of unprofitable operations and the effect of reductions in our operating costs. We also continued to strengthen our balance sheet in the first quarter of fiscal 1990 by reducing debt by over $18 million and retiring approximately 40 percent of our senior exchangeable redeemable preferred stock.''

The Cooper Companies develops, manufactures and markets a range of daily and flexible wear contact lenses in the United States and Canada.

COLUMBUS, OH (MARCH 6) BUSINESS WIRE - Taking another step to guarantee customer refunds, the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio (PUCO) Tuesday notified Columbia Gas that it will require the company to issue customer-specific refunds based upon the exact amount each customer is being billed under Columbia's increased rates.

The PUCO has already ordered Columbia Gas to post a $10 million bond to guarantee the refunds.

''It's important that Columbia Gas customers receive what they are owed once a final ruling is issued. Today's Commission action will ensure that customers will receive refunds based on what they actually have paid,'' said PUCO Chair Jolynn Barry Butler.

Columbia Gas implemented a rate hike in mid-February prior to PUCO ruling. Ohio law permits utility companies to implement their proposed rates 275 days after an application is filed, if the PUCO has not ruled in the case. Because of the complex proceedings involved in a case involving utility rates, it is not unusual for the decision to be reached after the 275 day limit. No other utility company has ever implemented increased rates without a PUCO ruling. Legislation has been drafted to extend the 275 day time frame.

''The Commission's action should allay any concerns customers may have about any refund to which they are entitled as a result of Columbia's implementation,'' added Butler. Butler would like a decision in the rate case by the first week in April.
